Give a cheer!

The Kennedy Eagle . . . the Kennedy crowd — together they symbolized the spirit of a year, your year, 1979.

Fourteen years ago, when Kennedy was opened, the Eagle was chosen as the team mascot and school symbol, for it was associated with the young President, John F. Kennedy, whose vitality and spirit lay at the heart of the new school. Since that time Kennedy crowds have come to regard the Eagle as their own; crowds have gathered to cheer for the school, for the Eagle as its symbol. So they did in 1979, this year of the crowd pleaser.

Nothing captures the crowd's imagination like a special performance

Crowds. Groups of people ... waiting to be entertained, or even — occasionally — taught something. In a way, the whole student body was one huge crowd of 1800 people expecting the world to give them a show. That happened, sometimes, as at the Homecoming Coronation and pepfest when you saw your friends getting crowned or getting stuffed with bananas. More often, however, the crowd found its pleasure only when it broke down into many smaller crowds, into little groups of people who shared common interests. In these smaller crowds you found enjoyment in the special performances of those groups or individuals who appealed to your own special interests. Just about any group could find its own favorite crowd pleasers, whether in the form of a winning soccer team, an enthusiastic group of cheerleaders, or a chemistry teacher who had an unusual way of nearly blowing up the classroom during almost every demonstration. Crowds. They were everywhere they thought they would find pleasure — in the classrooms, gyms, stadiums, auditoriums, or parks. There you would find individuals or groups which were honestly extraordinary, and which were intuitive enough to know how to appeal to your moods, tastes, and interests. What put those individuals or groups into the category called "crowd pleasers" was not their ambition to show off, but their ability to pull it off.

Some teachers were more than just teachers. They were people in love with their jobs. As such, they gave more to you than you may have ever expected, for their involvement with their work became contagious. You, too, became more involved, because of teachers who cared enough to be student pleasers.

Looking behind the scenes you find those who are involved

Homecoming's formal glitter catches the crowd's eye

It was the only thing which drew the school together. The teams, choir, band, orchestra, Kolleens, and the cheerleaders — along with the student body and the faculty — were together for one basic purpose: the celebration of Homecoming. It was a unique attraction, set apart by its tradition and formality. Creating a special atmosphere, it gave the students a chance to honor the peers they looked up to, the ones they voted for. And throughout the Homecoming week, those involved could feel a sense of pride in each other and in the school itself. It was an occasion to remember. It was fun.

All sports are not created equal

Cease worrying, football and hockey lovers. As much as one likes to think that sports like soccer and tennis are gaining in popularity, the fact remains that the majority of fan interest lies with the traditionally popular sports, such as football and hockey. The simple reason: some sports are blessed with more God-given glamour than others. Often, though, glamour wasn't the lone factor making a sport popular. Wrestling drew a large following after becoming a contender for the state title. The football team also attracted many fans. Maybe mostly because the games served as meeting places for those looking for the crowd. Then there were sports like golf and tennis that didn't draw many fans. Those athletes still found that the excitement of excelling as a team and as individuals made it all worthwhile. Fans, they knew, loved the faster-moving sports, but that has never limited the pleasure athletes gain from competing in the sports they love most. Hopefully, it never will.

After hours, you take a little time
for yourself

You weren't always a student. Sometimes you were simply a person out for a good time, looking for fun at the discos, fairs, and concerts. The end of that came soon, however, when your wallet felt the pinch of high-priced tickets. Then came the casual moments, the ones you shared with close friends, who were all you needed for a good time.

The making of a crowd pleaser!

Crowd No. 1

Certainly, you can find the crowd pleaser here. And you can tell, by his smile, that Todd Larson isn't lacking in having any fun himself. Usually, on the basketball court Todd is found in a one-on-one situation. After the game, however, he is often double and triple-teamed . . . by the girls' basketball team, girls' soccer team, and the girls' volleyball team. But then the opposition isn't so threatening.

Crowd No. 2

Who doesn't look up to one such as National Merit Scholarship finalist Joel Graf? Rather than copying the childish acts of his peers, Joel takes joy in his studies. You ask, "How can one take pleasure in school work?" Even an uninterested student could take interest in the $50,000 salary Joel will take in after graduating from college two years early. By then, Joel can act as childish as he pleases, for he will be able to afford it.

Crowd No. 3

Clothes, no doubt, set Mary Tuffley apart from this group. You can count on her to be tailor-fit and in fashion at any time and for any occasion. Of course, other grubware is fine, for those who wish to be the pleased instead of the pleasing. While most are content in corduroy and overalls, Mary contends with the eye-catching, attention-getting dress, which makes her the more eye-catching, attention-getting girl that she is.

Crowd No. 4

There is something special about a cute, innocent, sophomore girl. For she so easily attracts the attention of less innocent, less cute, senior boys. But beware, sophomore beauty, for many things will rob you of the interest they take in you. Like, becoming a junior. Every good thing comes to an end, in due time ... most likely next fall.

Can you spot the ultimate crowd pleaser?

In every crowd there is one person with a special sense of humor, a unique talent, outgoing personality or good looks that attract you. Such people don't need gimmicks, such as layers of make-up or a Steve Martin imitation, for they are genuine. They are special. Who is the ultimate crowd pleaser in each of these pictures?

So the show went on, and you blended in with the crowd, looking for and finding those extra-special crowd pleasers that only 1979 could offer. Sometimes, you may even have been a crowd pleaser yourself, for performers — on stage, in the classroom, on the gym floor, or at a pepfest — were as varied as the people who make Kennedy much more than just a pile of bricks. There came a time, however, when you had to get away from the show . . . a time when you could be comfortable and quiet, by yourself or with someone special. You used such moments as an escape into your own private world, where you did not have to worry about living up to the crowd's expectations. As a performer and as a spectator you learned much about yourself, but reflecting on the year you realized that the only one you really had to please was yourself.

There is definitely life after school!

As the echo of the final bell sounded, thoughts of yet another social studies lecture and worksheet faded away, for out in the crowded halls students prepared to enter their own special world of life after school.

Brewing in their minds as they left their classes were thoughts of upcoming tests, their parents' reactions to first-quarter report cards and another grueling 3 o'clock basketball practice. Following that would be a turn at that favorite 5 p.m.-to-midnight shift at McDonald's, the money from which would finance a weekend date or a night out with the gang.

Perhaps more than was the case with their in-school life, students found that their reputations were determined most often by the types of activities they chose to fill their after-school hours. Even though the typical "jock" or "freak" labels largely had disappeared, students found that labels still existed.

Judgments were made about them, depending on whether they were most dedicated to their jobs, their parties, "Mork and Mindy" reruns, sweaty practices in the gym, or even their . . . books.

Then there were those students — perhaps they were the majority — who did not fit into any one category, for their lives from 2:15 p.m. to 6:35 a.m. were a mixture of some work, studying, being part of the team, as well as having a good time.

One thing was fairly certain, however; few students wasted away their precious out-of-school hours by doing nothing. Just as their school days were a series of repeating cycles — class, class, class, lunch, study hall, class — so did their afternoons and evenings fall into patterns, patterns that met their temporary end every morning when yet another bell, that of an alarm clock, echoed in their heads, sending them back to the reality of everyday school life.

PAGE 19 — Top: Senior Dan Emberly scans the horizon with thoughts of what he will do tonight. Will it be a night out with that special girl or will he practice his trumpet to perfection? Lower: As the alarm clock sounds at 6:35 a.m., Dan slowly but surely comes back into the reality that in an hour he will again be in the role of a student.

Right: Saturday night was made for pleasure, and that's what juniors Peggy Anderson, Steve Rudquist, and Carol Cherveny and senior John Adams have on their minds as they decide to see "Up in Smoke." That movie and others, like "Grease" and "Animal House", proved to be big winners with fun-seeking students.

Right: Giving up evenings of fun or studying, junior Debbie Gieske and senior Bruce Hutchins take customers' orders at McDonald's. Their decision to hold down after-school jobs meant that while good times were postponed, bank balances grew steadily.

Above: Three o'clock on a December afternoon finds basketball players engrossed in a practice session. Scott Nelson and Al Clark offer an example of a defensive move. When practice is over, it will be time for a cold walk home, dinner, and an evening of nursing sore muscles while trying to conquer the day's class assignments. Athletes gave up lazy afternoons at home or after-school jobs as they chose instead to improve their athletic skills while having the experience of being a part of a team, thus showing their dedication to a group.

There is definitely life after school!

Left: He has already emptied his bottle of Pepsi, but junior Joe Mansour still has his television to turn to if his bout with homework proves to be too discouraging. Whatever happens, his books will be shoved aside when the next installment of "Soap" begins.

Left: Far away from the crowd — or their parents' eyes — these students find their own form of entertainment. An evening in a parked car often provided encounters with beer and marijuana for those students who found more traditional pleasures to be too traditional for their tastes.

Cover girl Cheryl Tiegs wouldn't be on the cover much longer if Hollywood ever got a hold of this classy unit. Wearing designer jeans and a disco blouse, sophomore Nancy Graham is waiting to be discovered.

Whoever it is she's smiling at must be smiling back. Terri Swenson knew ahead of time that her revised Annie Hall look of a suede blazer, pleated skirt and boots surely would turn those admiring heads.

Brad Dressen wears Levi cords and a shirt and sweater combo to create a studious appearance in hopes of attracting a girl with more than bodily interests. The books add to his image, even as they help build up his biceps.

If girls' fashions tended to look even dressier this year than in the past, it's because they were. Designer names like Calvin Klein, Gloria Vanderbilt, and Christian Dior were added to the standby Levi's label that had dominated girls' closets for so many years.

Designer labels became vital status symbols on girls' jeans, shoes, eye glasses, and shirts. Sometimes they were part of a comfortable outfit that included fashionable tops along with well-worn, but specially designed jeans. Other times they meant wearing 3-inch spike heels and learning to walk all over again.

Fashion was a simpler problem for boys who found that a good pair of jeans or cords with a coordinating flannel shirt or sweater usually satisfied their fashion needs.

JFK air holds fashionable flair

Trying to match the class of an art gallery, junior Cindy Edwards makes her stamp on fashions with her own version of a sleek shirt-waist dress. A flowing tent coat accented by a scarf and hat make the outfit complete.

He may appear to be a big jock on the outside, but deep down he is still a little boy. Senior Tommy Stratton holds his soccer ball in one hand and clutches a fluffy moose in the other. Wearing worn out jeans, a sweatshirt, holey Tigers, and a letter jacket, Tom is a perfect All-American boy.

Look out, Clint Eastwood, you've got competition heading your way. Wearing bibs, a flannel shirt, and a cowboy hat, senior Tony Tornatore is ready for a romping, stomping time.

The eyes have it. Nope. It's in the hair. Jim Renslow, Nancy Carpenter, Ida Kampa, Jeff Horman, and Patti Perfetti show that this year's shorter, curlier hair styles and eye glass fashions make for a pillar of good looks.

Third Down!

You maybe cannot easily tell if Ross is using the quick trap play, or the familiar around-the-end strategy. The game has not even started yet, for Denise surely has some kind of preventive defense in mind. While her brains, tact, and maneuverability may be effective, it is unfortunate, though, for Denise that her "Wind Song" is bound to stay on Ross' mind. Not very preventive. It could have been an awfully costly mistake for a girl counting on blocking a few passes.

First Down!

Heavy date, big night ... what'll help? Big biceps? Ross decides that you can never be too sure who or what you'll have to tangle with while with his date, Denise. Hopefully, not Denise's father. Besides, with the help of an extra-tight knit shirt, he can look awfully burly. And it is great for the confidence, too. For when those veins start popping out, it leaves Ross with some bulging visions of "Gator." Maybe some raw eggs would go well with his budding Burt Reynolds physique.

Second Down!

"I can understand your concern, Mom," pleads Denise, "but really, I can do without a can of Mace." But, according to Mrs. Konewko, one can never anticipate what might happen on a newly turned 16-year old's first date. "You never know," consoles Mother Konewko. Yes, Denise is surely glad that her mother never did hear about the numerous underground dates Denise took part in previous to her sweet sixteenth. Hopefully, Denise will soon hear the end of the chalktalk.

Holding

Penalty. In addition to the illegal use of hands, Ross is a little quick off the line. Ross goes on undeterred, for whatever he is lacking in tact, he makes up for in extra effort. Meanwhile, Denise appears to be lacking in defense. But her peaches 'n cream complexion and her eyes that sparkle and shine don't seem to be preventive in the first place. Ironically, this equipment could be just the equipment she needs for her game. For just as is true with many girls, Denise is a veteran at the sweep, (sweeping high school males into a cruel trap called love). With a style different from Ross' aggressive ploys, Denise makes her gains by playing the timid sweetheart, as many of her inhumane counterparts do.

Time Out

How strange. Denise said she wanted all that popcorn, and now she's not even hungry. Her tactic was to get Ross out of the huddle and out to the refreshment stand, where he would get loaded down with the favorites. With Ross' arms contained, Denise has time to consult her defensive strategy notes. Denise's mind says, "Push him back, push him back, wa-a ay back!" while in Ross' head a little P.A. system announces, "Mrs. Konewko scoring!"

Touchdown!

Contact! The score is made . . . one one-thousand, two one-thousand, three one-thousand. By persevering, Ross risks delay of date and an even later-than-expected final whistle. By now, Ross is so far up on Cloud 9 that he doesn't notice the front light has signaled the 2-minute warning. Soon the game will come to an unwelcomed ending. Final score: Ross 1 (kiss) Denise 1 (totally whipped, head-over-heels-and head's-in-a-swirl male). Since it was a draw, Ross schedules a tie-breaking rematch.

Baseball is a non-contact sport. It's nice.

Football is a collision sport. It's fun.

Dating is a contact sport. It's great!

No other sport has thrills or excitement comparable to those found in dating. Then again, in no other sport is the agony of defeat as painful.

In this game, the girl's main concern is defense, like blocking passes. Meanwhile the guy's interest lies in offensive maneuvers. His strategy must be subtle, however. One false move and he could be prematurely sent to the showers — make it a cold one.

Even with the risks involved, the rewards of victory make it all worthwhile, for dating is the ultimate contact sport.

Special thanks go to juniors Ross Heggstad, the aggressor, and Denise Konewko, the aggressee.

Dating: The ultimate contact sport

Vandalism: A nighttime thriller . . . ?

Left: 6:48 p.m. — Three Kennedy students are seen lurking in the vicinity of the Sheraton Motor Inn in Bloomington. They look sly, timid, and suspicious; however, their destiny is not detected, and they are not reported. Twenty minutes later, 35 rolls of toilet paper, valued at $12.87, are discovered missing from the hotel's supply room. The police are contacted. There are no clues.

Center: 9 p.m. — Students meet for an inventory. A list of supplies is presented: Elm tree tinsel? Check. Edible paint stripper? Check. Lawn carpeting? Check. And lastly, "Short" advertisements? Check. Mission accomplished? Almost. Next step? Victim! Who? Not yet decided, but soon will be. And as everyone knows, the culprits never fail in turning fantasies into realities.

Left: 7:03 p.m. — The dairy manager at Super Valu dashes to the telephone in a state of hysteria. His report: 5 dozen Grade AA extra-large eggs, valued at $4.45, are missing. Police arrive at the scene and question cashiers and shoppers. Their investigation proves to be unsuccessful. Their only guess? Shoplifting. But who? The middle-aged man with the sideburns? The stud in his early 20's? Or was it the old lady wearing the green denim skirt? These were their only suspects. The police were mystified; everyone on the force could see that this was not going to be an ordinary night.

Friday, Dec. 1, 1978

Bored with the monotony of Friday night athletics followed by the mad rush to MacDonald's, several Kennedy students decide to break the trend and set out to discover new aspects of teenage "fun." Before the discovery of this activity could take place, a number of factors had to be considered:

1. It had to be exciting.
2. It had to be cheap.
3. (Most importantly) parental approval was highly discouraged. After intense discussion a decision was made. The verdict read VANDALISM.

Right: 7:28 p.m. — Police headquarters is besieged by phone calls from all parts of the city. Campaign signs were disappearing everywhere. Beyond any doubt, it was the work of master thieves. Twenty minutes later, the calls from within the city subside, only to be replaced by one from the Leamington Hotel. Bob Short wonders if he should have more signs sent out to Bloomington. A special delivery telegram provided him with the information that his signs, along with a few others, were in popular demand.

Lower: 8:01 p.m. — There is a call at the police station from a Bloomington resident. She is home alone, and there is someone rummaging around in her garage. Police are asked to come immediately. Upon their arrival they are told about a person seen running from her garage with 2 large bags. An investigation takes place. They find nothing missing except 2 bags of leaves. Leaves ... ? A strange target for criminals, but then, what about toilet paper, eggs, and signs? The policemen take notes of the night's events. It didn't take long to conclude that there is definitely unusual activity in Bloomington tonight.

Right: 9:53 p.m. — The fun came to an abrupt end as a squad car came to a sudden stop in front of the newly "decorated" house. In a matter of minutes, all of the after-school vandals were gathered around the squad car, and a policeman was carefully searching each one. He reached into the jacket of one of the kids in custody, and to his surprise he pulled out a roll of ready-to-throw toilet paper. After a story on the way life should be, the guilty party gathered up their work of art. However, they knew their "decorations" wouldn't go to waste

... or just the path to a traumatic teenage arrest?

Left: 9:22 p.m. — The vandals pulled up to the scene of their predetermined victim. A quick but thorough survey was made of the area. The victim's house appeared to be quiet. It was time for action to commence. The tools of the trade were carefully removed from the car. The vandals exchanged glances. After several looks, they nodded. "Yes." The fun began! In minutes, the house was decorated like none other on the block. Unfortunately, tension slowly mounted as fear started conquering the vandals' excitement. A few eggs were thrown and as time went by, they were feeling more guilty by the minute. It was time to make a decision: would they stay and complete their job, or would they leave before it was too late?

Lower: Saturday, Dec. 2, 8:14 p.m. — Kennedy students are seen hanging out in the street. Neighbors begin to get suspicious. They wait. Nothing develops. The students remain in the street, apparently quite content with what they are doing, but they aren't. They are bored along with a few of their grounded friends and can find nothing to do. They fantasize about the satisfaction that could have been the outcome of their crime and the fact that, if it wasn't for a few mistakes, it would have been a reality. The list of "things to do" that night was close to an end. Nothing seemed exciting, at least not as exciting as the night before. The students' eyes met. There was one thing in question: would they do it again?

Saturday, Dec. 2 — When the excitement of the night began to subside, the culprits sat down to relax and answer any of their friends' questions. They explained the flurry of the police lights, the terror of being frisked, and the evil looks they got from neighbors. The memories sent shivers up their spines, reminding them that they should never repeat their crime.

After being caught red-handed it was impossible for the students to deny the charges brought against them. Even though each culprit claimed to be scared, the only thing they really feared was the mocking of their fellow classmates when word got around that they'd been caught. Convinced of the students' remorse, the officer dropped all charges, but he did reveal the list of culprits to assure people they'd been caught. The list read: Annette LeClerc, Betsy Nermoe, Karen Weinberger, Jane Pflepsen, Dale Bosacker, Bill Sullivan, and Jeff Haukom.

Paycheck

Wow! Another check! Pat had so many plans on how to put that money to use. Maybe some new albums and tapes, or even a stereo! Once he got that check cashed, anything was possible. Visions of wealth flashed before him as the teller counted the money into his hand.

This check was going to be different from the last ones. He wasn't sure how he'd manage, but this time he wasn't going to have the entire thing spent by the end of 3 days.

It wasn't exactly World War III, but the conflict between spending and saving was a battle for most high school students. A common strategy was to make as much money as possible to satisfy the urge to spend and the need to save.

Kennedy students obtained their money in many different ways. Some students resorted to game shows, raffles, welfare, and graft. But most preferred finding jobs to earn their money. While few made it big in the business world, many sweated and worked hard to earn the few bucks on their paycheck that they paid taxes on.

Often, students spent their last pennies days before the next paycheck was due. The irresistible urge to spend and the high rate of inflation brought hard times to many. The money that was once readily available for such basics as dates, entertainment, cars, and clothes, didn't seem to carry the same weight as it once had. People were forced to make more decisions on how to make better use of their money.

As students became more penny-wise, it became easier to save a little money from each paycheck. But as the savings grew, so did the temptation to spend it. Fighting to get money and keep it, too, seemed to be a never-ending battle.

Clothes

Because of the harsh Minnesota climate, Pat found it necessary to wear clothes. Mom and Dad couldn't always be counted on to furnish the proper attire. Their taste, or lack of it, often sent Pat rushing to the exchange counter after Christmas. No, those out-of-date double-knit slacks or the chartreuse cardigan Grandma knit just wouldn't work with his wardrobe. If Pat was to have the stylish clothes he needed, he had to buy them himself. Jeans and cords would do for the casual look at school, but what Pat really longed for was to achieve the "macho" look for the disco. Maybe if he saved a little more, he could have afforded some plastic pants or a neon-lit shirt.

Car

Even though it wasn't his very own, driving the family car ran up quite a bill for Pat. It seemed as though he was constantly putting in gas. It might not have been so bad had he put in more than a dollar's worth at a time. Adding to the toll were the costly repair bills from all the minor bumps and scrapes that can happen to anyone. It was beyond Pat's comprehension how the insurance payments kept increasing as fast as they did.

Dating

When it came to dating, Pat was no cheapskate. He would by pass White Castle and Arby's to treat his date to the finer cuisine served at Steak'n Ale. Pat and his date never attended the 99-cent specials at theaters; they would go for the premium entertainment at the Cooper. Nothing seemed to be too expensive for his dates. This usually caused them to wonder what exactly this big spender would be asking in return.

Entertainment

To some students entertainment meant getting high. They gave their money to pushers and liquor stores to get their thrills. This form of entertainment could be very costly for those who indulged in it, especially if they ending up bailing themselves out of jail. But don't worry Mom, Pat wasn't a part of this crowd. Basically, Pat's idea of a fun time was something legal, though he didn't consider needlepoint the most exciting endeavor for a Saturday night. He spent his money on tickets for concerts, movies, or school sports activities. Pat knew how to get his money's worth and wouldn't allow price to stand in the way of a good time.

Savings

Oops! That check didn't last long. Somehow all those dates, nights out cruising, and new disco clothes added up to more than Pat expected. What he had left could be just enough for a cheeseburger, but no, Pat was thinking of his future. He had college or perhaps a new car in mind as he deposited the remainder of his big check in his savings account. Measly though it was, that 59 cents may come in handy some day.

"Todd is very disciplined, extremely easy to coach, has a very positive attitude, and is a hard worker," said Coach Peterson. Bordson is an athlete and a student who is outstanding in everything he does, according to Peterson. Right: Another example of a dedicated athlete is Sue Phelps. Besides being committed to her sport, Sue is also an excellent student. Girls' swimming Head Coach Don Specht said, "Sue is one of the hardest working girls on the team, a super athlete, and a natural leader."

Two images of the modern 'jocks'

Responsible athletes uphold JFK's reputation

Athletes of 1978-79 built up an image of themselves that puts them far above athletes of past years. For most of their classmates athletes served as symbols of the way high school students should act.

Part of the respect afforded athletes came when students recognized the seriousness with which most athletes approached their sports. Whether they were males or females, "jocks" knew that there was no room for fooling around. Too much was at stake for that sort of behavior, especially for the many talented athletes who were fighting the competition for college scholarships.

By being part of Eagle teams athletes not only improved their physical abilities, but they became better people, people who understood what it meant to be committed to a group effort. They were rewarded for their dedication with letters, which usually found their way onto letter jackets. If athletes were symbols of traits that were positive in students, then athletic letters represented that which was good in athletes themselves: contribution, achievement, and a great deal of very hard work.

Divisions in the student body largely have disappeared, mostly because of the unifying effect that athletics have had on the school. Where once only "straight" students would have gone out for sports, by 1979 teams were attracting many students who, in other years and without athletic involvement, would have been called "freaks." Student stereotypes were broken down as students of all types came together as teammates.

While The Torch focused on athletes' supposed use of drugs and alcohol while in season, no one had any evidence that athletes were more or less involved with drinking or drug use than were other students.

In the classroom teachers generally looked to the athletes in their classes to be student leaders, for they understood the role of athletics in teaching responsibility and cooperation. Besides being committed to their sports, athletes were dedicated to their school work, motivated at least partly by the hope of a college scholarship that might come to a good athlete who also was a proven student.

As with anything that is good in society, there were those critics on the sidelines who liked to chip away at the athletes' image. Athletes were put upon pedestals for good reasons: they worked very hard to be the best in every way. The records of so many jocks in 1978-79, whether in soccer or wrestling or gymnastics, stood as proof of the quality of the boys and girls who gave so much to the school because of their willingness to get involved.

Disruptive behavior destroys athletic reputation

"Jocks" stood atop a crumbling pedestal in 1978-79 as their image was being eroded away by their own willingness to break rules of conduct laid down by coaches and the State High School League. In fact, many athletes lacked an understanding of simple traits of common courtesy.

Athletes' actions off the playing field made it difficult if not impossible for many people to want to support them as fans at their games.

While athletes should have represented the best in the student body, too often this year's jocks lacked the good sense to live up to the image created for them by hard-working jocks of previous years in Kennedy's history.

While the school did have some teams that excelled, like the boys' and girls' soccer teams, wrestling, gymnastics, and hockey, the majority of the school's teams had mediocre records. Lack of talent, poor coaching, or inadequate funding could not be blamed. The athletes themselves were their own toughest opposition.

There was a time when being out for a sport dictated everything about athletes' lives; their commitment to their teams was total. Jocks would be careful to get good grades so as not to jeopardize their eligibility. They would restrict all other outside activities so as not to distract from their dedication to the sport they had chosen.

That sort of dedication, for the most part, was sorely lacking this year. More often than not, athletes ignored training rules and moved into the party mainstream, where drugs and drinking were the primary social attractions. By not respecting drug and alcohol restrictions, jocks were never truly able to reach their athletic potential. Their physical conditioning was affected by the chemicals they chose to use, and when they were facing other schools' athletes, who may have been leading straighter lives, Kennedy jocks came off as being inferior.

Lack of commitment to training rules carried over into athletes' decisions to take on time-consuming jobs that also distracted from their sports. Often, students worked simply to support their drug and drinking habits, even if they claimed to need money for clothes, college, or cars. The time spent on the job could have been invested better in schoolwork or practice.

Teachers complained about cocky jocks who were disruptive in the classroom, who were lax about doing work, and who purposely put down those few athletes who did care about being good students. Some teachers faced verbal harassment from jocks who thought they were being cool when they were just being crude.

Was it a wonder that fan support of such athletes was lacking? Those jocks who did play by the rules usually had their own loyal supporters, even if in modest numbers, while many other teams wheezed and sweated and wondered why nobody wanted to come and see them play.

Here Lie The
of 1978-79

May their memory endure

R.I.P.

Changing times cause fading fads

Do you remember back — w-a-a-ay back, when you were young and everything you did was fun, and having fun was everything? You probably didn't think about the things that made life fun. You just lived each day like a youthful airhead, moving from one fun time to another.

Someday, however, you are going to want to remember. Your children will question you, and you will turn to your yearbook and say, "Was that the way it really was?"

For instance:

October 16, 2000

Kid: Hey Mom, we're having a '70s day at school. Do you have anything I could wear? What did you do back in the '70s?

Mom: Just a minute. I'll get my yearbook from 1979. Here. This is what we did. See these features? This Student Life section? That's what we looked like. Yeah, those were the good ol' days. Non-deacon!

Kid: "Non-deacon" ... Really, Mom. Sad. Good ol' days? Man, you were weird. Look at those shoes. "Polar boots." And look at her hair. It looks like she's been ratting it for a whole year. Hey, what's a disco?

Mom: What's a disco? It's a dance. Don't you know anything? And then there was teepeeing. You know, wrapping toilet paper all over everything and throwing it up into trees. The nights we spent on TP raids — dec'. I wonder why kids don't have fun the way we used to?

Kid: Mom, that stuff is so out. You've got to get up-to-date!

Mom: Yes, those things were fads, I guess. Fads are sort of like people. When they're new, everyone likes them, but as time goes on, they grow old, and soon no one even knows they existed. Just like me someday.

Clunk. Clunk. Clunk. The more noise they make, the better clogs are.

Every year this happens. This year it's worse. It's hard for me to think of something meaningful to write in the back of my friends' yearbooks. There is no way I'll ever come up with the right words to sum up my thoughts of the year. I want to say everything, but instead I say nothing. "I'm glad I got to know you. You're a good friend to have. Best wishes."

I sign my name and hand it back to the owner.

"Maybe I'll see you sometime this summer."

"Yeah, maybe."

We both know the chances are that we will never see each other again after the Senior Party. Sure, I'll see my close friends, but there are a lot of people that will fade out of my life forever.

When it's time to say good-bye

It won't ever be the same. I'm not saying I regret that it's over. I wouldn't want to go back and relive it, but it's been a big part of my life. I can't deny that.

This school has frustrated, punished, ignored and disillusioned me. At the same time, it has taught me, cared for me, given me hope, and most importantly, it gave me my friends. It is sad to have to end it now.

Conduct threatens future activities

Problem: rowdiness at past '50s events caused administrators to want to cancel '50s activities.

Problem: a change in state aid requirements killed off walk-through scheduling.

Problem: too many messes left in the foyer and parking lot put open lunch in jeopardy.

Problem: taping up of students and kidnapping of cheerleaders during pepfests put future pepfests in question.

Students' solution: a sit-down strike in the main foyer for one hour of one school day.

Result: an opening up of communications that led to increased Student Government involvement and broader input from students on ways to make potentially rowdy activities like those of Spirit Week go off without problems.

Teachers Tom Siebold and Ron Johnson took over sponsorship of the week and worked with protestors, cheerleaders, Kolleens, Student Government members, and administrators to come up with a program that would be enjoyable for the students and acceptable to the skeptical faculty.

Crowning ceremony yet unchanged

Nothing ever really changes for Kennedy's Homecoming Coronation — except the people. This year's fourteenth version of the event was identical to that first produced in 1965.

When Thor Hansen and Lisa Ciardelli were crowned, they were participating in the school's oldest and most exactly preserved tradition.

English teacher Orrin Bergan again directed the Coronation. His script, written 14 years ago, remained untouched. Indeed, the entire Coronation was just as impressive and meaningful for most students as it has been year after year.

Weeks ahead of Coronation came the petitioning and the preliminary and final voting that resulted in representatives from each grade level being chosen to participate in the Coronation. Seniors chose 5 boys and 5 girls to be candidates for King and Queen, and the entire student body cast votes for the boy and girl who would represent the school.

They had to wait until the actual Coronation to learn the results of their voting, however, for it was there that the previous year's winners, Mike McArdle and Debbie VanPelt, passed on their crowns and good wishes to Thor and Lisa.

Then came the ambassadors, chosen by the faculty, with gifts from the classes. Also offering gifts were representatives from the Kolleens, cheerleaders, and flag corps. The Concert Choir, orchestra, and Concert Band provided the appropriate musical numbers for the mood.

Like a remake of an old movie, this year's royalty brought new life and meaning to the ritual of crowning a Homecoming king and queen. Their names and faces gave the event a special sentimental feeling all its own.

Traditions broken by soccermen

By Friday morning's pepfest the dignified atmosphere of Coronation had been transformed into laughs and whistles.

After upperclassmen welcomed sophomores by waving tissues and mocking the B-Squad cheerleaders, seniors went on to retain banana-eating honors by devouring 31 bananas in 2 minutes in the Banana Eating Contest.

The Kolleens performed an informal football-style dance in addition to "Disco Inferno." The usual — senior boys kidnapping sophomore cheerleaders — was followed by the unusual — sophomore boys attempting to run off with senior cheerleaders — as class rivalry reached a boiling point.

When a strike by Burnsville teachers caused cancellation of the football game, boys' soccer took over, breaking the Homecoming tradition of football. A 2-0 win provided just the spirit needed for the week's events to come to a fitting close at the dance.

Students take pride in Homecoming

It was a week unlike any other during the school year, for the last several days of September found more smiles, laughter, and the bringing together of students with students, and teachers with students, than at any other time. Students forged new friendships as they got involved with the activities that went together to form Homecoming 1978.

Perhaps no one was more involved in the whole Homecoming idea than the newly crowned king and queen. "Being chosen Homecoming king was a fantastic experience and great honor for me. It gave me the opportunity to meet many new students and to find out what actually happens behind the scenes of a Coronation," said King Thor Hansen. "It was school spirit and pride that made Homecoming a great success."

Added Queen Lisa Ciardelli, "It is hard to explain my feelings about Homecoming. I met many new friends. This experience will be one of the most cherished in my life."

Others besides the king and queen and other members of the royalty also got involved. At the formal coronation many students and also last year's king and queen came together to make the production work.

While the student body watched the Coronation in quiet awe, they came to life at the next day's pepfest, where dances, cheers, races, and contests helped bring emotions to a peak. "Everyone got involved. The cheerleaders did a good job in accomplishing that task," said Linda Walsh, president of the Student Government.

Involvement again was the key when over 1500 fans came to Bloomington Stadium to support the team in the first Homecoming soccer game ever. "I think the fans really got our team going," said Bruce Zilka, a soccer captain.

Clearly, being involved in Homecoming took many forms, but one thing was certain: a person did not have to be in the choir or wearing a Homecoming cape or a soccer jersey to feel the excitement of involvement. All it took was a little sentimental pride in the school to make even a non-caring student want to get up and cheer.

PAGE 45 — Top: Although the crowd was small, enthusiasm was great, as shown on the faces of seniors Tess Stratton, Bob Halverson, Shelley Mooney, and Pat Hayes during the pre-game parade for the first Homecoming soccer game. Reputation affects dances' profits

After the rings are on and the "I do's" have been said, Traci and Thor complete the gettin' hitched process by sealing their Sadie Hawkins marriage with a lingering kiss.

Once Homecoming was over, students only had two other theme dances to look ahead to during the year. Of the two, only Sadie Hawkins stood a chance of being successful.

That success was based on a tradition of good behavior at Sadie. Being dressed in Dog Patch outfits caused no problems, for students' behavior at the dance "proved they came to have a good time, not to cause trouble," according to Pat Fatchett, advisor to the Kolleens, who were the dance's sponsors.

Cohesion provided the music, while Marryin' Sam and a park bench kept the crowd entertained during the band's breaks. The six chaperones from Young Life had no problem supervising a dance where kissing and cuddling abounded.

Unlike Sadie, with its 200 amorous couples the Snow Ball, this year's version of Winter Formal, attracted only 40 couples. The Student Government took on sponsorship of the dance, known in the past to be a notorious money-loser for sponsoring groups.

So it was again this year. Live music from Cyrus and popular records spun by a disc jockey weren't enough to fill the nearly empty cafeteria.

"We were given very little time to prepare for the dance," said John Sulack, Student Government advisor. "We were unable to circulate the news properly on such short notice."

Actually, it may have been publicity of a form the sponsors hadn't expected which accounted for the poor turnout. Rumors spread about the supposed failure of the dance, and that kept many couples from making the commitment to attend.

Perhaps it's just that more students are interested in a dance where informal dress and fun are not only encouraged, but downright expected.

As the curtain opened for the fall play, The Miracle Worker, the 17-member cast had a family feeling surrounding them. During the 8 weeks of production students came together in a way never before seen by Director Lee Engler.

"All the goals of theatre — creativity, rapport, ensemble playing, and applause — took on a very special meaning," said Mr. Engler. In the beginning cast members were so worried about their parts that they found it difficult to really get to know one another. The absence of a substantial crew caused the entire cast to have to become involved with backstage work, however, and that made all the difference. Working together side-by-side on the crew for hours at a time, cast members talked and laughed and became friends.

"I made the best friends I've ever had after 12 years of being in school," said Kim Heino, cast member. "We became very close, and I think the most important thing is that we learned to laugh at our mistakes and at each other. It gave me a feeling of self-confidence I never had before."

That feeling of confidence permeated every aspect of the production as Mr. Engler found his cast pulling together as a stage family to create a miracle, "a great production. When a theatrical experience like The Miracle Worker happens, everyone from director to audience can take away a very meaningful memory," he said.

While creating their miracle, cast members were bringing to life the story of Helen Keller, who became deaf, dumb, and blind at the age of 6 months. The story takes place in the late 1800's as Captain Keller, Helen's father, and his wife Kate have hired Annie Sullivan to teach Helen to communicate. The play itself is a story of courage and tolerance, and that's what the cast needed when facing problems with small audiences.

With their family feeling in mind, many cast members claimed that the real miracle worker in this production was Mr. Engler. "He is always on the move for the show," said cast member Mike Fischetti.

Praise for the director drew praise from that man for his cast. "A director always hopes for an ideal script, cast, and crew. Every so often he needs this ideal group to renew his reasons for directing plays," said Mr. Engler. The Miracle Worker provided just that ideal theatrical experience."

Grads find activity in spring heat

Once they had thought graduation would never come. After all, it had been something they had talked about for the last 3 years. Seniors in the class of 1978 began to get the message that indeed they would soon be alumni once they realized that prom, final exams, the all-night Senior Party, and graduation itself were dominating discussions with friends at school.

Those discussions warmed up just as spring temperatures did, especially on the evening of the May Tri-School Prom. The hot, crowded dance floor didn't wilt the spirits of the couples. The sparkle on the guys' rented shoes and the girls' shimmering accessories couldn't match the sparkle in their eyes.

Then came the serious business of two days of final exams and finally the big event: graduation. The activities that filled the days for some seniors prevented them from thinking about commencement until they were actually seated on the floor of the Met Sport Center that June 7 evening. "The minute I walked onto the floor at the Met, I realized that high school was over and could not be brought back," said Lori Holm '78.

Knowing that they still had the fun of the Senior Party to look forward to after graduation, 75 percent of the class came together 1 last time at the school to see what their parents had been up to all those winter and spring evenings. There they found numerous activities such as foosball, volleyball, a live broadcasting by KSTP, in addition to unlimited food.

Once the fun of the party was over, and the new grads began to disperse, the realization hit that, "all the people I had gone to school with for 12 years will never be together again," said Jan Lindstrom '78. "Graduation is a turning point from high school into adulthood. Now all the fun times are just memories."

Cartons gain new respectability

In the past milk cartons have led meaningless lives, consisting solely of thoughtless students drinking from them and casting them aside. However, with the addition of fascinating and educational facts on its sides the words "milk carton" have taken on a whole new meaning. Students were seen with pen in hand feverishly taking notes from the newest edition of these containers.

Milk cartons have taken over the space in the library once held by the encyclopedias. With the number of students using them growing, the shelves are often empty. Many students overcame this by accumulating their own private collections. Behind every "A" student there was bound to be a set of milk cartons.

With the value of milk cartons rising, some students turned to collecting rare ones like a stamp collector collects stamps.

Milk cartons became the cause of occasional brawls between students. Even best friends would fight over a rare issue. There were incidents of cartons stolen from lockers and well-planned hijackings involving huge quantities of cartons. It seemed as if there was nothing which would stop a serious milk carton collector.

All students had different subjects that were important to them, as well as reasons why they were important, but one thing they had in common was that they were all concerned with the development of their language skills.

Linguistics is a structured English course in which spelling, reading, and writing are taught in depth. Concepts are given, followed by examples to further illustrate the teacher's point. Linguistics student Rich Moore feels that he benefitted the most when sentence structure was taught by Vicki Colby.

Renee Boyes, who is planning to major in German in college, discovered that through taking the German course at Kennedy she gained a better understanding of the German culture. She also noted that "learning German has helped me to understand English Grammar better."

In eleventh grade English this year, Becky Seal found that Carley Bjugan "showed me new ways I can express myself, and so I learned more about myself," especially as she studied about how to write compositions. She found English to be a positive influence in her life.

Spanish, to Lisa Ellison, was just the beginning. She took it because "my occupation is going to be related to the field of international communications in some way." Lisa is planning to continue with Spanish, and is also considering taking Chinese, Russian, and Swahili.

Cheryl Hopper's interests lie in the French language and culture. Cheryl chose to learn French because "I wanted to be able to speak it fluently, and I'd like to study in France." Linda Lee, Kennedy's French teacher commented, "Cheryl has a natural gift for languages."

Twelfth-grade College Prep English has been a great help to Denise Logeland, who plans to go to a small liberal arts college. Denise feels that Orrin Bergin knows a lot about college and structures his course around it. "I just feel like next year I'm going to be prepared," she said.

Mike Fischetti has discovered that the theater "prepares me emotionally for living each day." This year he especially enjoyed acting in The Miracle Worker, where he made lasting friendships with cast members.

Students that gave special attention to English and some of its related courses believed that their lives after they graduated would depend on their abilities to communicate with other people, either by their written or oral talents.

Language Arts helps develop skills

Awareness was the key word for Social Studies at Kennedy this year. Students from all three grades agreed that through their Social Studies courses, they each gained a new awareness, a new look into the past, present, and future of the world they live in.

In World Cultures, a class which concentrates on the history and development of other countries up to the present day, Nancy Carpenter found that she became more aware of other countries and of world diplomacy, which interested her the most. One thing she learned was that "in order to deal with other nations, you have to know their cultures." Nancy felt that it was a beneficial course.

American Studies is a class for sophomores which combines English and Social Studies during a two-hour block. It involves a lot of personal study, and the students explore other areas besides those covered in the common classroom. Mary Schaeppi felt that it was "a very self-enriching course," and Chuck Densinger said, "I've never been challenged like this in another class."

Economics and sociology are the two main topics covered in twelfth grade Modern Challenges. Students learned about a variety of subjects, such as taxation, spending, drug abuse, and abnormal behavior. In Rob Amundson's opinion, it was a "practical, up-to-date class" that taught him things he could use in everyday life. "It gave me an awareness of what is going on," he stated.

One benefit from taking Contemporary Issues for senior Jeff Korkowski was that he had the opportunity to "form my own opinions and ideas" on the three areas of study the class covered: futurism, sex education, and current events. He also felt that the class helped to prepare the students for life after high school by covering topics such as the family and the society, which will always concern them.

In tenth grade Social Studies, one semester was spent on American History, and the other on the Industrial Revolution.

Doris Graden enjoyed the class and liked learning about things such as farming and the economic development of the United States and other countries. She said, "I learned a lot of new facts, and what I learned made me glad to live here."

Social Studies students began to come in contact with facts about the world and problems they would eventually have to deal with. It was a time of learning. It was a time well spent.

Science and math shape futures

Their reasons for taking courses in math and science areas differed; even so, these students shared a common motivation with others in that department who saw their future vocations tightly linked to being able to figure out problems, formulas, and equations, using skill and accuracy in their work.

Besides being a Merit Scholarship finalist, Shari Sherman was one of the most outstanding Human Physiology students in 1978-79, according to physiology instructor Loren Kesler. She took physiology "because I'm interested in how the human body works and functions, and because I want to be a physician of some sort," said Shari.

A psychology-related career may be the result of the psychology class taken by Mary Perrier. "I like learning about human behavior. Psychology gives me a better understanding of why people with behavior problems are like they are," she explained.

Chemistry and Physics were classes that Merit Scholarship finalist, Joel Graf, had reasons to excel in. "I'm planning on being a chemical engineer. Chemistry has given me the knowledge of the chemicals and their properties. With physics, I can put my knowledge to use."

Math students Dave Marquardt and Dave Schmidt finished Analysis in their sophomore year. As juniors, they took calculus at Normandale. Dave Marquardt felt that "calculus helps in all fields of work and education you encounter." Dave Schmidt added, "I feel that calculus is very important to have in college. It will help in anything you do."

While Career Math has not dictated what Brett Ward will do for a career, it has opened some doors for him. "Career Math gives you a look at different careers and the type of math involved in these careers," explained Brett.

Reasons for taking math and science courses have differed somewhat by those in each class, but the motivation possessed by them was quite similar. This motivation was due to the goals and interests they had for their future.

P.E. activities relate to Health

In 1 class students learned to use their bodies, while in another they learned to understand their bodies — and themselves — just a little better. Physical Education and Health classes complemented one another in that they both sought to develop in students an attitude of positive thinking about themselves.

"I think the most important thing I've learned from this course is to be more aware of my surroundings, of the things and people around me, of how I affect them and they affect me," said Ronda Crandall, a junior Health student. "I've learned how to deal with others as human beings," she said.

Since society is based on competition, Phy. Ed. classes stressed competitive sports that would allow students to handle stress and competitive pressure.

That idea was not lost on senior Mark Tabone, a participant in Elective Phy. Ed. "Phy. Ed. has influenced my life by teaching me how to compete . . . I like to compete," he said. "I feel competition is a big deal in high school, whether it's in the gym or in the hall."

Developing physical skills is another important thrust of the Phy. Ed. program. "Phy. Ed. has given me a chance to appreciate my potential, to develop my skills, and to improve my level of physical fitness," said senior Rick Haagenson. "I've always enjoyed athletic activities. I'm glad to have had the opportunity to participate in Phy. Ed. for the past 3 years."

For senior Karen Weinberger, Phy. Ed. participation helped her "to realize the importance of keeping in shape. I took Phy. Ed. because I enjoyed it. I liked the activities we did — badminton, racketball, volleyball, etc. — and I liked the exercise."

For sophomore Greg Bagley, Phy. Ed. is a "way to help me keep in shape," he said. That's been important to senior Kip Gohde, as well. Phy. Ed. "keeps me physically fit and helps me learn to be competitive" at the same time, according to Kip.

Phy. Ed. offered more than just exercise, however, as it helped to break up the 6-hour day. "Phy. Ed. is a class that not only kept my body in shape, but my mind, too," said senior Tom Helman.

Students find futures in Ind. Arts

As a student begins to explore potential job options, he/she might become confused. For many students, the problem of choosing a vocation was made simpler because of their involvement with Industrial Arts classes.

"I am going to pursue my education in drafting to go beyond what I have learned at Kennedy," said senior Dave Bloom. "Drafting is a great field, one that I would like to be involved in."

That attraction to a class which will lead to career opportunities was shared by junior Todd Walters. "Electronics has started me thinking about the future," he said. "I would like to attend an electrical institute and then go on to find a career in electronics."

Industrial Arts

helped students to look beyond the immediate courses to develop an understanding of related fields. For Sue Maus, taking Graphic Arts was important because "it will be easier for me to understand what has to be done to produce a newspaper. As a writer, I think that it is to my advantage to be able to know this."

More than just career opportunities were explored in Industrial Arts, however. The course provided a chance for students to test their skills. "I think that Metals has created a challenge for me," said Jeff Anderson. Finding a challenge was also important to Mark McDonald. "Woods has shown me what I can do with my hands."

Learning to do things for themselves was another aspect of being involved with Industrial Arts. To be able to fix one's own car or remodel one's own house someday will save a student some money. Realizing the creative as well as cost-saving possibilities that will be theirs once they had mastered various practical arts skills, students found greater than usual value in the department's courses. Junior Greg Anderson, for example, learned to do minor car repairs in his Auto Diagnostics class. His new-found knowledge will save him money every time his car needs repairs.

Industrial Arts classes sometimes helped students to view things in a different perspective. "Photography has shown me the intricate beauty of the world. It is a wonderful form of art," said photo student Dave Knight. "I especially like the realistic view and precision of photography."

Learning practical skills and being able to apply them after graduation were two reasons for taking courses in Home Economics and Business.

Tim Sharber plans to use the skills learned in Accounting as the basis for his future. "Accounting has taught me how to run a business, journalize, and make financial statements," said Tim. Accounting students also learned about the various types of businesses that exist, such as partnerships and corporations and to effectively manage and organize a business.

As a Marketing and Management student, Claudette Stanek found pleasure while learning the basics of marketing. "If you were to open your own business someday, the class will have given you the knowledge to run it. In the class, everyone gets to have a chance to own his/her own business and see what it's like," said Claudette.

Saving money and putting her talents to use were two benefits Robin Meredyk gained from taking a sewing class. "I learned how to make things cheaper, and sewing will enable me to make my own clothes so I won't have to go through stores trying to find things that fit," said Robin. "You have to be patient and can't get mad at the machines. You learn to be good and thorough at what you do."

Peggy Hogan, president of Future Homemakers of America, was very interested in Home Economics, especially in the foods area. Peggy enjoyed foods classes because "I like to do things that are creative." She has also learned new techniques in preparing dishes. Peggy felt that "in the future I will be able to put to use the skills I learned from taking Home Economics classes."

Interior Design student Lisa Nord felt that by taking the course, "I learned how to coordinate color schemes and to decorate rooms." Lisa took the course because "I like creative classes and using my hands." Lisa said that when she gets her own apartment, she will be able to use the knowledge she gained to decorate it.

Marianne Salitros' involvement in Kennedy's business courses was made up of 2 years of typing, 2 years of shorthand, and a year of office procedures. From her experience in these courses, Marianne can file, take shorthand, run a number of business machines, and type various kinds of business forms and letters correctly. She has been trained to perform well in the business world. Marianne said, "These courses have helped me prepare for my career as a secretary."

Even though these students differed somewhat in their reasons for taking a practical skills course, they shared one thing: each of their futures was linked to being able to perform a practical skill correctly.

Students rely on practical skills

Staff confronts maze of decisions

1978-79: Just another typical school year?

No way.

For Principal Donald Hasbrouck, Assistant Principal Mike Karbo, and Principal-on-Special-Assignment Ray Hanson, this year held a maze of problems which they had to work their way through.

In their attempts to solve problems, the principals were not alone. They shared their ups and downs with the counseling staff: Ann Miller, Myron Olson, Elwood Lindberg, and Don Bakken in achieving their goals.

What were the problems that constituted this maze? The answer is ahead.

Problem No. 1: Preparing to accommodate the new 460 ninth graders who would be a part of the 1979-80 high school scene.

Solution: Teachers were transplanted throughout the district, curriculums were changed and much sweat was lost revising programs.

Problem No. 2: Improving scheduling so that less of a student's class time would be taken.

Solution: Kennedy brought the all-powerful computer to the rescue. This computer was given exclusive rights to semester schedules and schedules of the future.

Problem No. 3: Unifying the student body with the administration in regards to school spirit. For a time, this created much friction and tension in the halls of Kennedy.

Solution: School spirit was packaged up and handed over to psychology teacher Ron Johnson for evaluation. After seeing the size of this problem, the aid of American Studies teacher Tom Siebold was recruited. Together, along with the Student Government and a lot of student suggestions a Spirit Week was proposed and accepted.

Problem No. 3.5: Deciding whether or not to let those ever-popular and often rowdy pepfests to continue.

Solution: Through the support of Mr. Johnson and Mr. Siebold and many outspoken students, the administration consented to a spirit pepfest.

Problem No. 4: Competing with time seemed to plague the counselors, who were frustrated in their attempts to answer the questions that students were asking this school year.

Solution: Though the counselors readily admitted the problem, the solution would hopefully come in next year's budget.

For the most part, decision makers worked their way through the maze, usually finding their way around the barriers which confronted them during the school year.

When two groups like American Field Service (AFS) and Foreign Language Clubs shared similar interests along with the problem of declining student involvement, it seemed only natural to combine them. AFS International Club was formed to plan and participate in some of the same activities as before, but with more students involved to make them more successful.

Eight foreign students at Kennedy brought more students to activities as well as regular meetings. Club members began the year with a Welcome Party for the 3 AFS students in September, where officers were elected. Spanish class students made a pinata for the Holiday Party in December, where the members trimmed a tree as well as hit the candy-filled pinata.

One of the most successful activities was the International Weekend in February, which introduced more students to the experience of having a foreign student in their home. During the weekend, students attended a Bluegrass concert and a sleigh ride. "I think I learned a lot from the weekend, besides having fun," said Connie Hogan, who hosted a student.

Overall, advisors and students seemed satisfied with the combination of the groups. Remarked Advisor Judy Halvorson, "I think that this year we have more people involved in the club, which benefitted both groups."

Foreign students gain memories

They knew they would have unusual experiences when they decided to spend a year as foreign students in the United States. As they became involved in school life at Kennedy and winter life in Minnesota, this year's 8 exchange students experienced America first-hand in a way no tourist ever could.

Five of the 8 foreign students had never seen snow before this year. Wania Storolli, who was here from Brazil on the American Field Service (AFS) program, liked the snow, but not the cold that went with it. She enjoyed the outdoor activities she tried, but preferred those indoors.

Tomas Barrios, a Youth for Understanding (YFU) participant from Paraguay, tried downhill skiing. Also on the YFU program, Georence Go of the Philippines tried another form of skiing: cross country. Both students enjoyed their skiing trips.

Snowmobiling on Lake Waconia was a fun activity for AFS'er Ian Miller from Australia. Even though he was nervous, Ian enjoyed it.

Other students found their school experiences to be especially memorable. Here on a year-long visit, Youssef Azmani from Morocco, found being a member of Kennedy's soccer team good because he was able to meet new people early in the year.

Els Rietdyk, an AFS'er from The Netherlands, liked the choice of classes she had at Kennedy. "At home, I choose from 10 or 12 classes. Here I have much more freedom," said Els.

Kennedy's Holiday Show

was one of the high points of Judith Kreiter's year. Judith, who was here on a private year-long visit from Germany, felt that participating in the show gave her something she will always remember.

For Christina Dahlin, a Swedish participant on the Student International Service of Europe program, a traditional Thanksgiving was something she had read about at home and was able to participate in this year. "All the food at Thanksgiving gave me a memory I will never forget," remarked Christina.

To native Minnesotans these activities may be taken for granted, but for foreign students, these "American" experiences went far beyond those of typical tourists, whose travels are superficial.

Mostly, cheers outnumber hassles

Sometimes it was great being a cheerleader. For those girls who cheered for the winning soccer or wrestling teams, or who were on hand for an upset hockey or basketball victory, nothing equalled the feeling of excitement that caused adrenalin to flow.

Sometimes, however, being a cheerleader was not so great. Those girls assigned to consistently losing teams, especially girls' teams, seldom had much to get enthused about. Then there were restrictions on pepfests, the hassle over the '50s activities, and even a bit of inter-squad arguing to contend with.

Despite the problems that went with the job, Cathy Carsberg said she wouldn't have missed being a cheerleader. "I would have been so bored without the excitement of being a cheerleader. I got more involved with the school and its happenings," said Cathy.

Sixteen varsity cheerleaders were divided into 3 separate squads to cover the various sports. Problems occurred when more than a single event was scheduled on the same night.

Then there were personal problems to be handled. Girls who proved to be undependable lost the trust and understanding of fellow cheerleaders. Whenever a group has to work closely together, "there is always going to be pressure," said senior Wendy Anderson. "That is more or less expected." Sometimes that pressure came out in bickering, though often the result was an increase in personal closeness.

Cheerleading rigors were taken on for the first time by the 10 sophomore cheerleaders. The busy life of a B-squad cheerleader was made easier by having a larger squad this year. Having a larger squad meant the girls could divide up and better cover the sophomores' games.

Sophomores felt a kind of pressure, too, though usually somewhat different from that of the older girls. "It was sometimes hard when you were cheering at an away game and you had no way home," said sophomore Nancy Heither.

By the time the March Spirit Week came around, most of the year's problems faded away as the girls got caught up in the fun of '50s and the pepfest activities. When they were out on the gym floor in front of an excited crowd of rowdies, it was hard to believe that being a cheerleader could be anything but terrific.

Hard work pays off for Kolleens

Two hours after school every night didn't always prove to be enough time for the Kolleens to write, practice, or perfect their choreography. Many nights, long after classes were over, the girls could be found dancing. This was even truer on nights prior to competitions.

All the practicing seemed to pay off when the Kolleens took fifth place at the Danceline Invitational held at Anoka High School.

Dancing to the sounds of "The Stripper", "Best Disco in Town", and "Disco Inferno", the Kolleens kept their audiences' attention at many sports attractions.

Where fans could be found, so could the Kolleens. This didn't leave many nights free, for the dancers could be found pom-pomming hockey games and wrestling meets and dancing at football, boys' and girls' soccer, and boys' and girls' basketball contests.

Dancing was not all the Kolleens participated in. The girls also sponsored the formal Homecoming dance and Sadie Hawkins. The Kolleens also were present at the Freshman/Sophomore Orientation held last winter.

Spending a week of the summer in St. Cloud at a Danceline and Drillteam Camp proved to be very rewarding. Bringing home every award possible, the Kolleens took pride in the 30 high score ribbons and the Spirit pom. Individual trophies were also earned, including Superstar awards given to Beth Hessberg and Debbie Larson. Debbie Tibbets took the title of Drill Down Champion.

"They were very dedicated and talented girls who worked hard," commented Kolleen Advisor Pat Fatchett. "And all their hard practice made it worth their while."

They joined the band program because they wanted to learn and because they liked to perform. To help satisfy students' needs, Director Tom Keith sponsored 3 extracurricular bands which provided musical outlets for about 80 school musicians.

Perhaps it was the Pep Band that played to the most people, for fans at athletic games usually outnumbered people at concerts. Pep Band members played for 15 winter sports events and pepfests to help build greater enthusiasm and support for the teams.

That support for the band was not returned, however, as band members often felt their efforts went unnoticed. "It was a waste of our time. If students aren't going to appreciate our playing, we've got better things to do," said Kim Peterson. What the group was looking for, of course, were athletes who would support them at their concerts.

Concert music was what dominated the Stage Band's folders. Members explored music of the jazz or jazz rock idiom. The 19 musicians tried various band styles, ranging from the big band sound of Count Bassie up through the songs of Maynard Ferguson.

Improvisation was a jazz technique that offered new challenges for some members. "There are no set ways of doing it, and it's an individual technique," replied trumpet player Steve Challeen.

Whoopie John might have been pleased by the foot-stomping music of the Polka Band. If it had been more popular, students might have acquired a taste for it, too. Junior Paul Kampa's interest in his junior high's Polka Band led him to organize a similar band here.

Despite their small or unappreciative audiences, most members of these 3 bands still found pleasure in doing what pleased them the most: playing good music in a variety of styles.

Varying styles put fun into music

Deserving bands work for spotlight

Mention Kennedy choirs and visions of highly polished JB productions and Holiday Show presentations filled a person's mind. Think of Jefferson's or Lincoln's bands and the same kind of image was created, that of well-known, extremely professional groups flooding onto a football field or auditorium stage to perform their selections.

Over the years Kennedy's bands have not shared that type of image, however, for students and staff have thought of bands as being second-class members of the music program. Short on numbers and talented players, the bands have not been able to attract the attention of audiences.

"Everyone sees our Marching Band and when they hear Kennedy bands, that's what they think of," concluded Denise Logeland, president of the Band Council.

That problem of image provided Thomas Keith with his greatest challenge in this, his first year as band director. Right from his first days on the job he knew he had problems when the supposedly large and spirited Marching Band he was to direct turned out to be a weak collection of only 64 students, mostly underclassmen.

Those underclassmen gave him his greatest encouragement, however, for their participation was double that of seniors. That led Mr. Keith to believe that future years will be better years for the bands.

Gaining exposure for the bands was one of Mr. Keith's major objectives. "The Kennedy High School band program is of such a quality, that it should be known throughout the state," explained Mr. Keith. He set up a schedule of concerts and trips that were designed to rekindle the spirit of band members while gaining them a greater share of the school's musical spotlight.

Instrumental music to many students meant the sound of the Eagles, a popular professional group, and when the school's band did not create a similar sound, students tended to turn them off. Mr. Keith explained, "The bands must realize this comparison is being made, and it forces them to maintain the highest standards."

That's what Lincoln and Jefferson have been doing with their bands, and those groups have been given the prestige and recognition they have deserved. "They have done the job, and now it's our turn to do it," said Mr. Keith.

Orchestra cast in supporting role

While the more successful choirs and bands were able to command their own spotlights during the year, the 21-member orchestra found itself on the fringes, often in a supporting role.

Mostly, it was the choir that got the bulk of the applause when the orchestra accompanied the vocalists at the Homecoming Coronation, Holiday Show, Pop Concert, and finally graduation.

Members put on their Strolling Strings outfits to play for the Republicans, including the new governor, Al Quie, and later for Christmas party celebrants at the Edina Country Club.

Because their enrollment was small, their opportunities for performing were limited. Director John Dennis noted that the numbers problem goes back to the elementary grades, where an orchestra member must begin his/her training. "It takes years of practice to produce a good player," said Mr. Dennis. A student cannot simply decide in high school to be in the orchestra. If the decision isn't made years earlier, it's too late to make it when a student comes here.

While they were small in numbers, the group still had quality in its musicians, claimed Mr. Dennis. The orchestra was made up of students who were more dedicated, on the whole, as shown by their years of participation.

Small numbers helped make for a cohesive group, too. "It's easier to get along with a smaller group," noted member Lisa Ewers. Mr. Dennis added, "The kids were very well behaved," in or out of the spotlight that often eluded them.

Choirs' past stardom lures 'em in

For many choir members, their love affair with Kennedy choirs began when they were younger brothers and sisters of members of earlier choirs.

"My sisters recommended choir to me," said Betsy Sorenson. "After a year of Sensations I began to feel the same way" they did about being in choir.

"It's an honor to be a part of such a highly rated group," said Lisa Reuder.

What kept students pouring into the choir program was the thing that appeals the most to all musicians and showmen: the lure of the spotlight. Because of its reputation the choir has in the past performed with such stars as Mary Martin, George Jessel, the Carpenters, and Liberace. The group has sung at conventions, prisons, and fairs in many states.

That sort of exposure was part of this year's choir experiences, too, as the choir sang for functions in Minnesota and in Florida, where students spent spring break.

"I guess it all begins with Mr. B. (Director James Bontrager)," said Betsy. "Everything about the choir rotates around him. His dedication and excitement just rub off on to all of the kids. That's when all the worthwhile experiences begin."

Choirs 'sell' themselves to public

Just as about 300 students learned to sell their songs to audiences, they also learned to support a habit that controls the minds of choir students in the spring, that of traveling.

Director James Bontrager felt confident in early August that his choirs this year were going to be outstanding, on stage and on the selling circuit. By December, his confidence had been proven correct, for after the choirs' Holiday Show he called the groups "fantastic — they are a fantastic choir."

Sales-wise, the groups were also successful, for students had sold 3,300 pizzas in 3 hours on one November Saturday, in addition to all the candy, sausage, cheese, disco and Gap Dance tickets they had marketed earlier.

Money raised by selling products went to support the choirs' trips.

While those trips dominated students' attention as winter wore on, Mr. Bontrager still found his choirs able to give excellent shows. Probably no production meant as much to the groups as the Holiday Show, given 6 times to over 6,000 people. "I got goose bumps just standing there and singing," said junior Nancy Helvig, Concert Choir member. By mixing holiday music with traditional Christmas pieces, the choirs were able to satisfy a Bloomington Human Rights request that Christmas alone would not be the focus of any school's holiday programs.

This year the ticket price for the Holiday Show was raised to $2.25 for students and $3 for adults, which did not seem to affect attendance. "A lot of college concerts aren't as elaborate and don't provide such a variety of music," said Michelle Hackett, choir member.

Even though they had worked so hard to earn money for the spring trip, what stood out in most choir members' minds was the thrill of giving a performance. "It was rewarding to see all our hard practicing pay off," said Mary Tuffley, Concert Choir member, in terms of applause — and that spring trip. Surely, the satisfaction gained from such hard work paid off all the more.

Lower left: Junior Terry Peterson and senior Kathy Allison remember the warm experiences they shared during their year in JB's. Lower right: Jeff Franklin puts everything in his singing and gestures for the song "Boogie Woogie Country Man."

When an individual is chosen to be a part of the JB Singers by its respected director, James Bontrager, the initial feeling of happiness is often replaced by a feeling of anxiety, for the JB's feel the need to equal, if not surpass, the achievements of the JB Singers from past years.

Participation in activities such as the JB's is very demanding upon the individuals involved. "It takes a lot of time," commented junior Joe Mansour, "but the rewards I received from it made it worthwhile."

Being a JB requires 100 percent dedication and a willingness to work extra hours to perfect that final song for the upcoming performance. The profits from their many shows went to the choir fund, which aided in supporting the choir trip in the spring.

Being a member of the JB's played an integral part in the daily lives of those involved. Said junior Terry Peterson, "If it hadn't been for the music program at Kennedy, I would have stayed in sports. Mr. Bontrager really makes music fun to be in."

Songs, which range from jazz to Broadway, from country to pop, compared only to the variety of audiences for which the JB's performed, from elementary schools to country clubs. But wherever they did perform, the reaction was the same: both the audiences and the performers left the shows with a feeling of satisfaction.

JB dedication proves rewarding

Government seeks a reputation

Sometimes members may have felt they received their greatest publicity during their own elections. After that, it was often difficult to convince fellow students that they were indeed active and that they were accomplishing things. That's probably because much of what the Student Government took on this year needed much time for it to be completed.

Members tackled a major problem with school spirit. They decided to accept the sponsorship of the Winter Formal, which they renamed the Snow Ball, in order to keep that traditional dance on the calendar. They need not have bothered, for only 40 couples attended.

Then there was open lunch, a program that had been threatened because of an increase in littering in the foyer and parking lot areas. Representative Becky Berteau headed a drive to alert students to the problem and to call on them to be more careful with their debris on school grounds.

In a way the sit-down strike participated in by about 200 students in early February was a kind of slap at the government, for protestors went around their representatives in trying to communicate with the administrators. After the strike the government became more involved than ever in promoting the activities students said they wanted, especially the Spirit Week programs.

Sometimes having a group made up of strong individuals proved to be a problem, according to Co-Advisor John Sulack. Each person was a leader in a way, he noted, and it was hard to have a single leader — a group president — and to expect others to follow. They were "a super group of kids," said Mr. Sulack, who at times quarreled, but only because they all had ideas they wanted to see used.

President Linda Walsh said she was pleased with the group's accomplishments. "We got ourselves established as a group," she noted. That will mean much when a new government takes over and builds on this year's achievements.

While most students found themselves locked inside during brisk winter afternoons, members of the Kennedy Ski Club were sharing on-the-slopes fun with their classmates that helped them forget the winter's miseries. While weeks of below-zero temperatures hindered the club's turnout in January, warmer Wednesday afternoons found as many as 105 skiers hitting the Buck Hill slopes.

January's bad weather did take its toll. "With low temperatures skiing always increases the wind-chill factor and creates the possibility of icy areas on the slopes which may be hazardous to skiers," noted Keith Carlson, the club's president.

Better skiing was found in Colorado during the second week of winter break when 45 club members and 4 chaperones hit the slopes at Vail, Copper Mountain, Keystone, and Breckenridge. For $219 students were provided with lift tickets, housing, and bus transportation. "We had the best skiing anywhere," said Keith. Members were able to ski in powder snow in the mountains, and they could practice doing flips and skiing on great mogul fields.

Presidents' Weekend in February found 43 skiers spending $99 each to ski and stay at Thunder Bay, Ontario, where for 3 days members again got a taste of skiing somewhere beyond Minnesota.

In spite of the good times members found on the slopes, Co-Advisor Judy Halvorson said she thinks senior high Ski Club participation is dropping off "not due to interest, but because so many have jobs or other activities."

Lower right: Playing on board one, junior Stan Thompson, winner of the Outstanding Player Award, intently studies his potential moves.

When Kennedy's Chess Team returned to their boards for a second straight season of winning, chessmen proved they were skillful players.

Chess itself is a very hard game, one of strategy and concentration. To remain one of the top teams in the Region is a true sign of skill. That skill must extend to each team member, noted Co-Advisor Luther Schmidt. "Even though it is pretty much of an individual sport, it does take a lot of effort from each team member to do his best for the benefit of the team," said sophomore Chuck Densinger.

Leading the team into playoffs with his undefeated record was junior Stan Thompson. Thompson set a standard of playing excellence that brought the team to an 8-1-1 record, third place in the All-Conference playoffs, and a berth in the State Meet.

"They were known to be a pretty tough team," said Co-Advisor Bruce Connell. "They gave each team stiff competition."

Successful chessmen prove skills

KTAV captures school life on film

In a way, they were the ultimate fans, for they never missed a sporting event or school concert or even a play. While the call letters KTAV (Kennedy Television Audio-Visual) were not as well known as WCCO or KSTP, for 6 boys and 2 girls those letters told the story of their year.

As part of their service to the school, KTAV students filmed every boys' and girls' game as well as all concerts and plays, so athletes or performers involved could critique their own work. In addition, many of the tapes were broadcast to the community over the cable television network.

Not only did KTAV students have the opportunity to learn the functions and use of complicated television equipment, but they also had the chance to put their skills to work. Volunteering their after-school time students filmed school events while putting together their weekly program which they wrote and produced themselves.

Slow start hinders intramurals

Lack of an advisor delayed the beginning of intramural sports. Awed by the size of the job, no teacher would take on responsibility for the program until January.

Finally, Ron Cavanaugh was persuaded to take on the job that no one has ever accepted for more than a single year. His work with intramurals allowed in winter broomball, basketball, volleyball, and table tennis seasons to begin. In the spring, Mr. Cavanaugh worked with IM softball and pass ball.

"Intramural sports was a great program," stated Mr. Cavanaugh. "It fulfilled the need to participate in athletic activities for the majority of kids who didn't make varsity sports, but who still wanted to play."

Students formed their own teams, and sports offered depended entirely on the interests of the students who chose to be involved.

As the demand for different activities increased, Mr. Cavanaugh was hard-pressed to find enough adult supervisors to be with the games. Lack of Kennedy staff support sent Mr. Cavanaugh to colleges in his search for prospective supervisors.

While participants were not in intramurals for the material rewards, members of winning teams did receive championship T-shirts. The shirts became a sort of status symbol, for they represented a sense of pride in accomplishment and a feeling of belonging. Once Mr. Cavanaugh got involved, he was hooked on the IM idea — and on the fun.

Achievers learn with enthusiasm

They weren't in it for profits — at least, monetary profits — alone. While Junior Achievement teaches students about America's free enterprise system, including the profit motive, the program also does much to improve students as people.

"What you learn is rewarding," commented senior member Cathy Francis. While each of the 4 companies in the Junior Achievement program were expected to at least break even, if not make a profit, on their business ventures, members realized that what they gained in improved communications skills and confidence was more important and significant.

Participation for the approximately 70 members brought them each an academic course credit, though that's not why most students joined. According to JA member Linda Walsh, the activities "help you to be better prepared for the future," whether or not that future might involve the business world.

Awards were given to those who became members of the $100 Sales Club — those students who sold over $100-worth of their product.

In addition to the group's overall advisor, industrial arts teacher Don Specht, students dealt with sales advisors and production advisors provided by their sponsoring companies.

Pillsbury stood behind the students in the East Bloomington Trade Association, while Montgomery Wards worked with People Pleasers. Eagle Enterprises was sponsored by Modern Merchandising, and Earth Products had Hitchcock Foundry supporting it.

New style brings 'Torch' success

Work on The Torch began long before the first day of school for Editor Jay Kiriara, Copy Editor John Hessburg, and Managing Editor Joan Moline. During the summer they met to completely redesign the newsmagazine "so it would look as fresh and professional as it reads," said Jay.

Their design ideas were followed by the 37-member staff when work on the year's monthly issues began. From their coverage of the Homecoming royalty to their controversial drug copy and report on school violence, Torch staffers worked to make their stories, photos, and artwork relevant to the interests of students.

Besides their year-long struggle with the deadline clock, The Torch staff had to work hard to maintain an All-American rating, a tradition that grew to 23 consecutive semesters when this staff's first semester issues received a 5-star All-American award. "We didn't work just for rewards, though," said Jay. "What was far more important was the way the staff learned to be efficient and independent," he said.

By mid-year, the staff was able to make use of the school's new phototypesetter as the publication became completely self-sufficient. "It was challenging at first to get adjusted to the typesetter, but after a while everything went smoothly," said Jay.

"The many hours spent working on The Torch seemed unprofitable until it was printed and distributed and we had something to show for our efforts," said Joan.

"Together, we learned, we created, and we were friends, that was the most rewarding part," said John.

He told them they were going to learn a great deal about writing and printing and photography, and that their year as Profiles staff members would be one of the most enjoyable of their school career. He also said they were going to work hard. Very hard.

He was right.

By the time the last major deadline in February had come around, the 56 members of the Profiles staff knew that Advisor Jon Kuklish's warnings had been accurate on all counts. They had enjoyed the experience of creating, they had felt the pressures of responsibility, and they had reveled in making new friends. And they had worked. Very hard.

"Trying to make our first deadline, our staff stayed up until 4 a.m., and we still weren't done," said Jim Johnson, Sports editor. "But we can look back now and see that it was worthwhile, not only in seeing our work in the yearbook, but also in learning that if something has to be done, you can't wait until somebody nags at you until you start."

In the beginning, it was only Mr. Kuklish who nagged photographers for better pictures, or staffers for better captions. Later, as the staff grew to understand that they all had to care about the yearbook's quality if the book was to live up to its All-American traditions, more and more students developed a sense of pride in what they were doing.

"We had a commitment to do the best we could," said Editor-in-Chief Vickie Bertramson. "In 20 years, a yearbook is most people's memories of high school."

But enough of work. There also were good times shared with new friends. "I think the most rewarding experience this year was meeting all the people on Profiles," said Lisa Reuder, Student Life editor. "I got to know a lot of people as good friends rather than just as acquaintances. I think most of the people on the staff feel this way."

The result of all this work and friendship? "A beautiful yearbook," said Mr. Kuklish. "A yearbook reflects not only the school, the year, and the people in that year, but also the outlook of the students on the yearbook staff. The 1979 staff was filled with exciting, kind, careful, and happy students. The 1979 Profiles reflects good times and good people."

Grant, the teams' leading scorer, was also an All-Conference selection.

Girls again dominate state soccer

If such a thing existed, the girls' soccer team would find themselves sporting their second State Championship trophy in as many years. Their 8-2-1 record put Kennedy at the top of girls' soccer in Minnesota, even if the sport is limited to Lake Conference competition only.

As it is, the girls had to settle for another Lake Conference trophy, which was fine with Coach Lynn Aaze. She expected this team to be very competitive, especially since many members of the 1977 team had been underclassmen. Those returnees proved that they could put to use this year what they had learned in previous seasons as they withstood the challenge of much-improved teams from Jefferson, Lincoln, and Burnsville.

"Our well-balanced team had depth in every area, but the defense was our greatest strength," said Coach Aaze. That's where juniors Patty Jenson and Karen Holter, both All-Conference picks, provided excellent protection for the team's most valuable player, goalie Kriss Holman.

While Holman was proving efficient at keeping out opponents' shots, Kennedy's All-Conference forward Lisa Grant was leading the Eagles' offense. Grant and Mary Perrier started out the year as the team's co-captain, but that leadership team had to be changed to include Toni Hemmer when Perrier suffered a broken ankle early in the season.

During the team's first year in 1977 there was more overall enthusiasm, according to forward CeCe McCan, another All-Conference choice. "Even so," she said, "the Eagles had more talent and were more poised in this second season." I can't think of any weaknesses on this team," said Aaze.

Among their 8 wins the biggest score came against Minnetonka, where the Eagles made 7 goals compared with none for the Skippers. Perhaps the season's most important contest came against Burnsville in mid-October. After losing 2 games in a row, the team came back to beat the Braves 3-1. That led to another 3-1 win over St. Louis Park, and a 2-1 victory in the season finale, once more over Burnsville. That final win assured Kennedy of sole possession of first place in the conference.

What made those victories all the more encouraging for Aaze was the fact that only 4 of the starting 11 players were seniors. If Aaze was hopeful this year with her strong nucleus of returning players, she should be even happier next fall when 7 girls come back, most with 2 years of experience playing on the team that has led Minnesota girls' soccer during its entire history.

As far as skill goes, one might say that they were a notch above the rest.

But, as it goes in all of athletics, the most talented don't always win. And just as the Kennedy boys' soccer team found out, winning in athletics boils down to who can take the best advantage of good opportunities.

"I believe that we had the best soccer team in the state of Minnesota," said boys' soccer Co-Coach Jerry Peterson.

Nevertheless, "breaks do happen," said Peterson, thinking back to the 3-2 loss in overtime to Lincoln, a game in which the Eagles thoroughly outplayed their cross-city rival. "And it's important that the players find that out," he continued, noting that later, in everyday life as well as in sports, that the one supposed to win often doesn't."

Still, the Eagles had much success, marked by their 17-2-2 record, the 17 wins setting a school record. Sparked by the high-scoring forward line made up of junior Randy Kajewski and seniors Bruce Zilka and Bob Fuentes, the Eagles set a state record with most goals scored by a team in a single season, recording a total of 69. This forward line, along with senior fullback Ray Driver, made up the Kennedy portion of the All-Conference team.

Goaltending, which was thought at the start of Kennedy's season to be a probable weakness, proved to be a strong part of the Kennedy team. That position, filled by senior Paolo Amato, set yet another mark for the soccermen when Amato kept the opposition scoreless in 10 games, another state record.

Adding to these achievements, Kennedy became the first high school soccer team in Minnesota to act as the main attraction in a Homecoming sports event.

This opportunity to play before such a large spirited crowd only furthered the good attitude possessed by the Eagle soccermen. This attitude, noted Peterson, played an important role in Kennedy's successful season; "Practice goes better, and is more fun when the players have such good attitudes," said Peterson. He pointed out seniors Glenn Haram and Ray Driver as two very big leaders in building this healthy team morale. "They've got good outgoing personalities and were very inspirational to the team," he stated. "Lane Hartfiel, a senior, wanted to win so badly, that he always played well," making him a leader by example.

With such team morale and talent it seemed out of place for the Eagles not to be State Tournament participants, or maybe even State Champions. "But that's what makes sports fun," said Peterson confidently, "and that's the way it should be." Luckily for Lincoln, that's the way it was.

Talent tallies high for soccermen

Boys find depth

Having so many talented players on one team isn't always advantageous, as many disappointed coaches know. Talented players like recognition. Talented players like to score. Talented players like to handle the ball. Some forget the word "pass". Result: good players . . . bad team.

Not so with Kennedy's soccermen. "We had a bunch of pretty unselfish kids," said boys' soccer Co-Coach Jim Klaseus. This unselfishness, otherwise known as teamwork, was marked by the fact that 12 different players scored for the Eagles during the season.

"Normally, you're lucky to have 3 or 4 guys scoring," he noted.

Leading the soccermen in total points scored was junior Randy Kajewski, with 34 points. All-State Bruce Zilka followed with 28 total points, but led the Eagles in goals, scoring 18. Kajewski, along with Ray Driver, received honorable mention on the All-State ballot. "We should've had more," said Klaseus regretfully. "Frankly, there were players from other teams who were named All-State that would not have made our starting team."

"We had tremendous depth," stated Co-Coach Jerry Peterson. "Many players sitting on the bench for us would've started for the other teams," he added. Co-Coach Klaseus pointed out the Eagle's defense, "Our fullbacks Driver, Tom Stratton, Todd Bordson, and Glenn Haram, deserve a lot of recognition. "There were some games when our goalie hardly ever had to handle the ball," he explained.

All of that varied talent combined with teamwork made for many results and achievements; mainly, good players, good team, and good soccer in general for the perfectionists of the sport.

Gridders lack essential enthusiasm

Once the game begins, the sidelines form a gap dividing the coaches from the players. According to football Coach Mike McKay, a similar gap — this time, a mental one — takes over at the same time. Coaches can prepare a team physically and emotionally only to a limit, for when the opening whistle sounds, it is all up to the players.

Coach McKay, in his sophomore year as head coach, knew he was ready to take the team through to a winning season. "Football is a game of emotion," he said "You have to have the desire to win." McKay had that desire, but his team fell short of his expectations when they compiled a 3-6 record.

"Our team this year lacked the enthusiasm that it needed to overcome our opponents," said McKay. Not even four captains — Robby Amundson, Brad King, Chuck Vavrosky, and John Wilharm — could help the team to overcome problems with attitude and respect for rules.

Coaches were told of player violations of the High School League drinking rules by a large number of team members. In the end, only one player confessed to breaking the rule, though many others were suspected of being rule violators.

Although not admitting guilt, many players argued that drinking did not hurt their play on Friday nights. That point was disputed, but one thing was clear: whether caught or not, those who broke rules did nothing to inspire team unity and dedication. Relationships between coaches and players did not go unaffected either.

In spite of this problem, the team did have its bright moments and its positive accomplishments. Some individuals stood out, like Vavrosky with his 125 tackles, just 1 short of the school record. The offense earned high marks, too, for its average of 5.9 yards per carry, and special teams proved effective, as shown by their ability in recovering onside kicks.

The 1978 season served as an example that, even some positive achievements on the part of the team, it takes more than a well motivated coach to lead a team to success.

PAGE 119 — Top: After a sizeable gain against Minnetonka, junior wingback Al Clark loses the ball while being hit from both sides, as Tim Rogers, Robby Amundson, Mike Miller, and Todd Larson look on. It was turnovers like these that caused Coach Mike McKay a great deal of grief during the season. Lower left: After receiving a pass from quarterback Dave Knight, Al Clark speeds around a Minnetonka defender in an attempt to gain extra yards. Lower right: Senior defensive end Tom Valley looks on with concern as the offensive unit strives to move the ball against the strong Cooper defense. Valley's face reflects the feelings of his teammates as he watches the 7-0 half time lead evaporate in the second half.

All summer the Eagle football team cited the opener against Jefferson as the main emphasis of the '78 season. "Everything pointed to that game, and when we lost, some of our winning spirit went with it," Coach Mike McKay explained. Senior Quad-Captain Robby Amundson agreed: "Losing the Jefferson game was the downfall of the season." The Eagles lost the hard-fought game, 3-0.

One of the problems that was to hold back the Eagles this year was the fact that they were a first-half team. Said senior quarterback Dave Knight, "We were all emotionally ready at the beginning of the game, but as the game went on, we got down on ourselves, thus losing all the emotion we had." This was evident in the Lincoln game as the Eagles went into half time losing only by 3, and then lost 17-7 after failing to score in the second half.

The Eagles reversed their luck in the following game against Minnetonka, beating the Skippers 22-14. This time the Eagles got the breaks and capitalized on them. Though they won, they still failed to score in the second half. Kennedy was then defeated by a strong, well-balanced Edina West team on the following Friday, a week before Burnsville forfeited a game due to the teachers' strike in that school system.

"Not having the Homecoming game against Burnsville might have been a blessing in disguise," explained McKay,

"because at the time we had five people out with injuries, and the week off game them a chance to heal."

One week proved too short a time for recovery, for in the next game a gap was left in the offensive line, as center Ed Pekarek, guard Amundson, and tackle Jim Christensen all were out with injuries. The Eagles failed to overcome this setback, losing to Cooper 22-7.

A loss to the Hawks left the team in down spirits. The next week, when the Eagles invaded St. Louis Park, they could not stay with the emotionally high Orioles. Kennedy dropped the game, 12-0.

With emotion near an all-time low, Kennedy realized the situation and played the next game against Edina East with a great deal of motivation. Said Amundson, "We knew there was no chance of any post-season play, so we decided to give it all we had." This was easily seen throughout the game as the Eagles beat the highly ranked Hornets 36-28 in a hard-fought, wide-open offensive game. McKay stated that the win was the high point of the season because it came at a good time. "There were some undercurrents happening at the time causing some of the players to lose confidence in themselves and their team."

Though the Eagles lost the final game against Richfield 21-9, it was felt that the season ended on a positive note because throughout the game Kennedy played with intensity, physically staying with the traditionally powerful Spartans.

Eagles fail to overcome setbacks

winner and tackle Dave Friend. This picture symbolizes the "almost" factor that was apparent throughout the season. The Eagles' emotion was high but not enough to carry them through the second half. For the most part of the season, Kennedy could not push to that extra mile that possibly could have taken them to victory. Lower right: Showing his value to the team is senior Quad Captain John Wilharm as he drags a Minnetonka defender at Bloomington Stadium. Wilharm has been a consistent player for us," said Coach Mike McKay. He added, "He was one of the most improved players since last year." McKay had sufficient evidence for this statement because in Wilharm's junior year he averaged 3.8 yards per carry, improving that to 6 yards per carry as a senior.

Cross country transforms image

Traditions dominate the sports world, including the cross country program. Unfortunately, Kennedy's tradition in that sport has been one of losing.

That tradition was challenged this year, however, when the boys' and girls' teams proved to be more competitive than ever before in their history.

For the boys' that competition resulted in a 5-3 record, the 2nd best ever in the history of Kennedy. There were 18 boys on the team this year, which consisted mostly of seniors. This gave the boys a great advantage.

"The team itself had a lot of experience behind them. The seniors showed a lot of leadership and effort," said boys' Coach Dick Green. "We had a few problems but we got them worked out by the good leadership."

Co-Captain Dale Bosacker trained for the season by running 11 to 15 miles a day during the summer. The peak of the season for the team was beating Minnetonka. "I feel the team was a well balanced one and had a good effort towards running," said Bosacker. "It was a lot of hard work but well worth it," said Co-Captain Dave Nelson.

Finishing the season, the girls posted a 2-6 record, coming close in all their meets. This year there were 11 girls' on the team and, as with the boys' most team members were seniors. "I feel that I ran better than I had expected to and found myself improving as the season went by. It was a worthwhile season and each team member had effort as a leading factor for the year," said senior Lynn Brownell. Team member Lynne Dagendesh prepared herself well for the upcoming season by running 6 to 7 miles a day during the summer. "The high point of my running season was placing first in a 2-mile run, and setting a new school record of 13:09," said Dagendesh. "We had a lot of encouragement from each other which made us a very close team," said Coach Lenny Volk. "The girls were enjoyable to work with; They all had good attitudes and were dedicated to the sport."

6'1¼" and 185 pounds.

6'1¼" and 180.

6'1" and 183.

Those three must have been real assets to the football team, right? Nope.

Stars on the basketball team? Nope.

Hockey team? Nope.

In a sport dominated by those less blessed with large frames, Keith and Kent Carlson and Jim Ryan overcame the vast prejudices of the sport of gymnastics. Along with Larry Alman, they qualified for the State Gymnastics Meet, after leading their team to a 6-0 Lake Conference record.

According to Coach Duane Hoecherl, sizewise the Eagles were the biggest team in the state. Adding to their squad, Steve Gonczy and Joe Comer, who both possess more typical gymnastics stature, the Eagles combined to take almost one-third of the 28 All-Conference spots.

Such competition within the team helped make Kennedy a major threat in Region 6AA. Coming up only .7 points short in the Region Meet, the Eagles narrowly missed a chance to return to State for the third straight year as a team.

This kind of success didn't come easy. Some gymnasts started practicing in mid-summer, continuing through early spring. Said Co-Captain Jim Ryan, "Five of us started in July at the Gopher Clinic, and a few of us still practice through the winter with the girls' team."

However, not all of the gymnasts were as willing to practice so diligently. Explained senior Keith Carlson, "At the beginning of the season, many JV team members didn't want to work hard."

Enter team leadership. "Our captains (Kent Carlson and Jim Ryan) got those guys started, though," he continued.

They improved. The JV team ended the year losing only 1 meet all season. "Everybody helped each other. It wasn't just the captains who got the team going," said Ryan.

"They were a hard-working group," stated Coach Hoecherl. This hard work paid off for many of the gymnasts at State.

Keith Carlson took third in the Region all-around, while on the pommel horse, twin brother Kent placed second in the Region and finished sixth in the State. Ryan and Alman qualified for State, after taking second in vaulting and sixth in rings, respectively, at Regionals.

Even with the team's disappointment with not making it to State, few words of regret were heard from the coaches or the gymnasts. Perhaps the achievements of the individuals making it to State, coupled with the satisfaction that hard work and unified team efforts bring, were enough to drown any thoughts of discontent or feelings of disappointment.

"Our girls could tumble as well as any in the state . . . and most of the time better," said girls' gymnastics Coach Duane Hoecherl.

Strongest of the events was floor exercise, where Samantha Thomas, Mary Hoffman, and Nancy Goodlund earned high scores consistently.

Other individual events found the girls making progress and posting better and better scores as the season went on. Hoffman improved on all-around, while Goodlund was outstanding on the uneven bars.

Even though no girl had had much experience on the beam, Hoecherl said that the performances of Karen Weinberger, Joan Moline, and Mary Kass steadily improved.

Most memorable of the season's meets was a loss to Lincoln. That meet saw the Eagles score 116 points for a new school record, which was still 4 points short of the Lincoln total.

After seeing his team win their own Annual Kennedy Invitational Tournament, Coach Guy Blessing hoped the volleyball team had reached a turning point in a slow season. "We played well in our tournament," stated Blessing, "and we felt we could keep playing that way."

However, the inconsistent play which haunted the team all season showed up as the Eagles dropped 2 matches the following week. Then came Edina West and 2 more tough losses, losses which nevertheless convinced the girls that they could be a better team than their record showed.

With spirits boosted, the girls entered a late-season surge that boosted tournament hopes. Among the reasons the team played well during those weeks was the strong net play of Captain Sue Godwin and Stacey Peterson. All-Conference selection Vickie Braman also "led by example," said Blessing. "She often held the team together."

Even so, the team's inconsistency returned and would only let the Eagles muster an 8-8 overall record, including a first-round Regional loss to Edina West.

Individuals stand out from teams

Small Ski teams lack experience

Small in numbers and limited in experience, skiers faced limitations that often were hard to overcome.

With only 3 experienced skiers returning from the previous year, the boys' downhill ski team could only muster a 3-8 record. The girls only had 1 skier returning, and a lack of experience on that squad resulted in a 1-10 record.

Coaches cited steady performances from John Ryder, Doug Janzig, and Steve Nelson for the boys, and Cindy Biros and Julie Kline for the girls.

Cross country skiing fared somewhat better, as the boys posted an even 6-6 record and the girls were able to win the city championship. Coach Dick Green found boys' Captain Scott Woidele providing team leadership, along with the fastest times. Topping the girls were Lori Sasse and Lisa Orvald.

If the skiers' goal was to improve, it was achieved.

Girls lose many

In high school sports it's usually beneficial to have a team heavily laden with returning seniors. That way the team and coach can draw upon the supposed playing experience those seniors could provide.

Girls' basketball Coach Dale Welter enjoyed that situation ... last year. This season, the reverse was true, for only 3 experienced girls had not graduated.

"Our success was dependent on how fast the young players improved," Welter explained. For over half the season Welter could see little hope for the team. Game after game the inexperienced Eagles fell far behind their opponents.

Finally, some players did come around. Kelly Holton on defense and Teresa Hendricksen on offense proved to be effective, and Captain Lisa Grant played consistently all season long.

Even with these improving players, their efforts couldn't bring this hapless team a single conference win.

The Eagles defeated the Cougars 57-53.

Two years ago, this team won only 2 games. The players were relatively short, and they were not yet really good shooters.

Two years later, nothing much had changed for members of the boys' basketball team. They were still rather short — only a single player was as tall as 6'3" — and they were still rather inconsistent shooters — a 39 percent shooting average doesn't win many ball games.

Their overall record of 9-11 pretty much told the story of a season that found some players performing extremely well, but only some times. One player alone played with the kind of consistency Coach Steve Strommen was looking for. He was Dave Knight, and he was the Eagles' standout all winter. Knight led the team all season in scoring, with his 14.5 points-per-game average, and in rebounding, with an average of 6 per game. As the most consistent shooter, Knight was looked to game after game to be the Eagles' leader on the floor.

Knight was sometimes overwhelmed by tall players. Only Kennedy and Richfield lacked players 6'6" and taller. Perhaps because Richfield also was a smaller team in the conference, Kennedy was able to destroy the Spartans, 78-46.

Knight, of course, wasn't the only man on the floor for the Eagles. Co-Captain Todd Larson, who was a good shooter, always gave a 100 percent effort, according to Strommen. Also, Bruce Zilka, despite being 5'7", proved to be an offensive threat in his third year on varsity.

Coach Strommen found his job to be aimed at keeping the team believing that they could compete with the taller teams, even if their .500 record was not impressive. By the time of the Regional playoffs, the team began to gel as a unit. Players gained confidence, and they sent a scare through the Region 6AA playoff bracket.

Starting off with third-place Lindbergh, of the Lake North Division, the Eagles showed more poise than ever before as they posted a 61-45 victory. Then came a powerful St. Louis Park team and a seesaw game that reflected the Eagles up and down season. Ahead by 1 with just 90 seconds remaining, the team lost players to fouls and lost the game to a more consistent team.

They ended the season as they began it, as a team with some hope for success, but not enough size to see it through.

Cagers hurt by inconsistency, size

Sometimes a team is remembered in terms of wins and losses. Other times, it's outstanding athletes who stick in the fans' memory. For swimmers, the season's records and standout competitors weren't obvious. What swimmers remembered was all the hard work they endured in grueling practice sessions.

"Swimming is more physically tiring than any other sport I've been in," said junior Paul Mahon, a 3-sport athlete. Optional morning practices and the daily 2½ hour afternoon sessions allowed some swimmers to swim 10,000 yards a day.

Those practices paid off for some, as senior Co-Captain Joel Berglin broke the school's 10-year old record in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 1:00.1. Tim Rannow also broke a record, in the 200-yard individual medley; his time was 2:07.0.

There were also positive things about the team which didn't appear in the record books. Coach Bergie Lang said, "There was a real feeling of kinship on the team. Everyone was accepted at his level and allowed to be a real part of the team."

"There weren't any real individuals on the team," stated Rannow. "We all tried to help and encourage each other as much as we could."

Though the season lacked the success and attention of that of some other teams, it still had its successes for swimmers like Gary Vikesland. "He was consistently the hardest worker on the team," said Lang. In this season, hard work was the thing to be remembered most.

Swimmers find success in defeat

It was a typical wrestling tournament. Given a rest between rounds, the 8 contending teams found time to rest, talk, and goof around. Most of the wrestlers were scattered throughout the gym, either alone by themselves or with 2 or 3 other teammates.

Not Kennedy's wrestlers. They were together in one group. All 12 of them.

"If there is one thing that makes me most proud," said Coach Dave Arens, "it's when someone tells me that our team seems so close."

If Kennedy's team members were close, their dual meet scores were not. Outscoring opponents 754-210, the Eagles' 18-0 record left them with the best record in the state of Minnesota at the end of the regular season.

Spurred by Brad Tufto and Chuck Vavrosky — both 21 - 0 — the Eagles were tops in the Lake South Conference. In the 8 conference matches, the duo combined for 16 wins via 15 pins and 1 major decision.

Those 2, along with 5 other teammates, helped Kennedy put over half the team on the All-Conference team. Besides Tufto and Vavrosky, Don Swetala, Scott Sturgeon, Todd Arens, John Morgan, and Jim Hoeve received All-Conference honors. Behind these honors were 7 combined records totalling to 100 wins, 17 losses, and 6 ties.

Because of these successes, the Eagles rose to a No. 2 ranking in the state poll, a mere 2 points away from a No. 1 rank at one point during the regular season. And as it goes in the world of athletics, No. 2 has to try harder. No. 2 has something to prove. So the Kennedy team was left to look ahead to tournament time — State, that is — where they had but one simple goal in mind: winning the championship. State, that is.

State Champions lead wrestlers

It's been said, that if you want something badly enough, you'll get it. As for Chuck Vavrosky and Brad Tufto, along with the rest of the Kennedy wrestling team, they surely appeared to want it badly enough. What did they want?

In Vavrosky's and Tufto's case, it meant Region and State championships. And for Kennedy as a team, it meant many other Region triumphs as well as the Region Team Championship and a third place team trophy at the State Wrestling Meet.

Qualifying for the State Tourney in Regions were Don Swetala, first place in the 132-pound weight class; Tufto, first at 167; and Vavrosky, first at heavyweight. Jim Hoeve at 155, qualified with a second place finish. Placing third were seniors Del Lindquist and Rich Haagenson, and junior Todd Arens. Other place winners were John Morgan, fourth; Scott Sturgeon, fourth; and Mike Luzar and Pat Hayes, who took fifth and sixth, respectively.

These numerous victories seeded the Eagles first in the Region 6AA Team Tourney and helped them on their way to winning that tournament, with wins over Mound 47-2, Jefferson 43-10, and 'Tonka 27-17. The triumphant Eagles were then State-bound.

Once at State, the Eagles easily handled Worthington 31-14, before losing their only dual meet to Fridley, 29-15. In a battle for third place, the Eagles pinned No. 1 ranked Albert Lea 24-17.

In individual quarterfinals, Swetala and Hoeve were knocked out contention, while prospects for Tufto and Vavrosky improved. Both dominated their weight classes throughout the tournament.

These victories helped make Coach Dave Arens the winningest coach at Kennedy these past two years. His credentials included not only a 43-4 record, but also seven state qualifiers, in addition to two state champs to his credit.

As for the Kennedy team as a whole, nothing was quite so contagious as winning.

The better the team did each meet, the better the wrestlers wanted to do on the mat, for they wanted success — very badly, indeed.

Close losses discourage icemen

Like Dickens' novel, The Tale of Two Cities, the hockey season had the best of times included with the worst of times.

For the Kennedy hockey team, the spirited best of times came with come-from-behind wins against Lincoln, Richfield, and Burnsville. The bad times, however, haunted the Eagles, like their Regional loss to Jefferson, 7-2.

Junior Paul Bauer exemplified the best of times by scoring hat tricks against Bemidji and St. Louis Park. With 42 overall points, he set a new scoring record for juniors and led the team in this department.

Senior Tom Peterson also made Kennedy scoring history by becoming the sixth defenseman to score over 20 points.

Finishing with 39 conference points (second highest in the conference) Jeff Horman proved his All-Conference stature as he definitely contributed to the best of times.

Nevertheless, the worst of times came as the Eagles finished out the year with a losing record, the first such year in Kennedy hockey history. The magic numbers in the season scoreblock showed this disappointment. Adding to Coach Jerry Peterson's frustration was the fact that in nine of the losses the difference was only one goal.

These single-goal losses were the root of much discouragement among the team. Even though discouragement was felt by the players, they refused to give up. "It was these one-goal games that propelled some seniors to take on the obligation of providing leadership," Peterson said, broadening this point. Seniors Tim Connolly, Ray Driver, and Barry McDaniels were individuals who assisted Captain John Wilharm with this task.

Individualism on the part of a few players at different times throughout the season caused inconsistency; this hindered the Eagles' success.

Success is not always measured in the win-loss column. Coach Peterson felt that success was achieved by the fact that the team had learned a lesson on team unity. Bauer agreed with Peterson's feelings: "By the end of the season the team had learned an important lesson about attitudes and teamwork," he said.

It took positive attitudes on the part of those players who had learned their lesson early to help the team make it through the worst of times.

Once there were hundreds of loyal hockey fans, pouring into the Ice Gardens hours ahead of every game. This year, there were a few hundred dedicated fans, who, despite their smaller numbers, still found a measure of the excitement they were looking for in the game of hockey.

What they came to see, of course, were their favorite players involved in hard-fought games, like the 5-4 overtime victory over Richfield, or the 2-1 overtime loss to Edina East.

As Jeff Horman added to his point total game after game, fans came to watch his play to see if he could — as he finally did — score in every game during the year, which was a first for any Eagle hockey player.

Adding to fan interest was the power play unit, made up of Horman, Wilharm, Bauer, Tom Peterson, and Tim Connolly. That group scored in over 40 percent of the season's power play situations, as the team proved that hockey still could excite the crowd.

Icers chill fans

Their team was small in numbers, but the season was big in records. Even though the turnout for girls' track was small, many records were set during the spring, 1978, season as the girls ended with a 6-9 record.

Tri-Captain Cathy Clark set 2 new marks, 1 in the shot put with a distance of 39'3", and 1 in the discus, with a distance of 110' 11". Equaling her own 1976 record in the high jump was Wendy Godwin, who cleared 5'4". In running events, CeCe McCan set a record in the 440-yard dash with a time of 59.7. Finally, there was Tri-Captain Debbie Braatz' time of 2:33.1 in the 880-yard run, which set yet another record.

Three relays also broke school records. The 440-yard relay posted a 51.6 time, while the sprint medley had a 4:41.0 time. The mile relay's new mark stood at 4:14.0.

These outstanding individual performances came in a season which saw the 32 team members improving meet after meet. Coach Sonny Carlson was concerned about his team's small numbers when the season began. His team competed with synchronized swimming, golf, and softball for team members.

Even though at first he was upset about the squad's small size, Carlson said that when he looked back on the spring's meets, complete with broken records, he could only be satisfied.

Record-breaking track girls excel

Experience lacking on the courts

Winning isn't everything in athletics. That's fortunate for boys' and girls' tennis players, for winning wasn't a common feature of their respective games and seasons.

Last spring's boys' team managed only three wins in their 11-match schedule. According to Coach Bergie Lang, several of the match losses were by 3-2 scores, but that fact did nothing to brighten their record in the scorebooks.

"You can't win in the Lake Conference without a third singles," said Lang, whose team was without a strong person at that position. His inexperienced team placed only Dave Griffith and John Westley in State Meet competition.

That excuse could not be used for the team's losses during the regular season, however. Rather, Lang claimed a lack of strength and a lack of overall experience as his team's downfall. What successes they did have came as a result of consistent play; the team simply outlasted opponents who may have become sloppy or careless in their play.

Despite what was a depressing season in the record books, the team found spring on the tennis courts to be to their liking. According to Lang, players enjoyed working with one another, and the placement of a doubles team in the State Meet gave them a special reason for pride.

Enjoyment on the courts was also a part of the girls' season, again in spite of the win-loss record. Actually, the team bettered its last year's record by winning a match for the first time in Coach Blake Jaskowiak's 2-season career as coach.

Only one player, Julie Klein, was skilled and experienced enough to compete on the same level as other Lake Conference competitors, according to Jaskowiak.

Other girls improved steadily throughout the season, added Jaskowiak, players like Chris Hanson and Captain Sue Maus.

With added time, things may have looked brighter for both teams, but there weren't enough weeks in their seasons to allow the inexperienced players to catch up, skill-wise, with the conference's better teams.

Losses don't sink girl swimmers

To them, it didn't really matter.

It just didn't appear to make a difference to either the girls' competitive swim team or the synchronized swim team that they didn't score a lot of points or win a lot of meets. Instead, the chance of performing with the rest of the unified team members seemed to satisfy them just fine.

Explained girls' swimming Head Coach Don Specht, "Our team was very enthusiastic. We had a really positive attitude and were a very close team."

Serving as an example to any team, the Eagles, who were 1-9, showed how team unity and positive attitudes bring forth good efforts from team members. "Every week personal times improved," stated Specht. These efforts were not fruitless. The medley relay team of Jan Elvidge, Sue Phelps, Lori Backer, and Mary Cardelli set a school record with a time of 2:04.7. Setting additional records were Cardelli, with a 1:17.7 time in the 100-yard breaststroke, and Backer, with a 1:10.7 backstroke.

Placing first in Regionals, diver Barb Hokanson earned a trip to the State Meet, where she missed the state finals by a .5 of a point.

Seldom were there any personal conflicts, for the hard work, which any swimmer knows intimately, makes for great camaraderie.

This same hard work was evident on the girls' synchronized swim team. After losing their first 5 meets, the Eagles did something that most any athlete appreciates: they bounced back. "Everyone worked hard and improved," said Coach Judy Halvorson.

Inexperienced and 0-5, the girls sought to save face by practicing their timing and by synchronizing better their joint movements to the music. They came back to win their last 3 meets over Prior Lake, Lincoln and Minnetonka.

Captain Carolyn Sauer, who was given All-Conference honors, led the Eagles to a 12th place in a meet including 24 other teams from all over the state. Hard work seemed to turn the coin for Sauer, who was the high scorer for the swimmers.

Synchronized swimming takes more strength and skill than many other sports," said Halvorson. "It requires a natural rhythm," she added, pointing out that not everyone can excel in it.

In their ability to do something that not everyone can, the swimmers could find true success. The team's unity, hard work, and enthusiasm surely helped to make what disappointments there were much easier to forget.

March 1: The outlook for the 1978 Kennedy baseball team did not hold a great deal of promise. In fact, it looked pretty bleak for Head Baseball Coach Buster Radebach, who phrased it more tactfully as "anything but favorable."

Explanation: his old team had graduated. He was left with only 3 returning lettermen, one of whose status of joining the team was doubtful. The winning tradition for Kennedy baseball, along with the respect from the other Lake Conference teams, was at stake.

For the Kennedy team to be any kind of threat in the Lake Red Conference, many previous JV and sophomore players would have to step up, meet the challenge, and fill the gaps.

They did (step up, meet the challenge, and fill the gaps). They were (a real threat in the Lake Conference). In fact, carried by an excellent defensive team, along with a .304 team batting average, the Eagles finished with a respectable 12-4 conference record.

Led by first-baseman-pitcher Kent Hrbek, who batted .460, along with catcher Todd Larson, .340, and Bryan McGroarty, who batted a .320, the Eagles scored more than 10 runs in 7 games. In 4 games they won by the 10-run rule, a rule giving the win to a team before the regulation 7 innings, when they are leading the opposing team by more than 10 runs.

The ability to score runs, bolstered by a strong defensive infield and outfield, took the Kennedy team far in Region play. After winning the first two Region games, putting them in the double elimination round, they lost to the eventual runner-up in the State Tournament, Cooper, 8-3. After going on to beat Edina East 4-3, the team was eliminated by Richfield 4-3.

Pitching, as Radebach pointed out, was one factor holding the Eagles back. "We couldn't get the strike outs when we needed them," he stated. He went on to explain that while the Eagles' defensive play could be counted on to make a lot of key plays, to keep the score down a team needs the strike outs at crucial times.

Still, Radebach was well pleased with the pitching, anchored by Jim Koehnen, who recorded 6 wins and 2 losses, along with Hrbek, who won 3 games, losing only 1. These two, along with third-baseman Mark Braaten, made the Lake Red All-Conference team.

In Hrbek, Kennedy found "a super player and leader," in Radebach's words. Hrbek, who played in the annual Lions' All-Star baseball game, featuring the best of the players in the state, was drafted 17th, in the 17th round of the professional baseball league draft last summer. Commented Radebach, "Although he was drafted so late in the draft, he was really treated as a first-round pick, receiving quite a sizeable bonus."

Hrbek, along with the rest of the team, helped boost Kennedy's 13-year old baseball winning percentage to .666, and keep respect for Kennedy baseball great among other teams. More importantly, the team showed how talent, along with whole-hearted efforts, will cause this kind of respect from anyone, anywhere, later in life. Surely, much more than baseball fundamentals were learned.

Track builds on underclass talent

Seniors are the competitive heart of most high school athletic teams, but such was not the case with last spring's track team. Without the contributions of its talented underclassmen, the team never would have been able to earn a winning record.

It would have been hard to maintain a competitive attitude during a season where wins alternated with losses, and the record ended at 7-6, if it had not been for the encouraging performances of juniors and sophomores and the leadership of the senior Co-Captains Kirk Talley and Dennis Callahan.

"They were good captains," said long-distance runner Mark Hartmann. "They both competed in a lot of events, but no matter how much they had to think about their own events, they were still encouraging us and building us up," said Hartmann.

Callahan, who was the varsity team's most consistent scorer, was very valuable, for he was able to compete in both running and weight events, according to Assistant Coach Jim Klaseus.

Another senior, Paul Schaeppi, also was a vital point getter, for he ranked as a leading pole vaulter in the Lake Conference for most of the season. "He cleared the height of 14 feet more times than any other Kennedy vaulter ever had," noted Coach Mike McKay.

Beyond those three seniors, however, the team's strength lay mostly with the underclassmen. Dave Knight broke the school record in the triple jump when he was able to jump 41 feet, 3.5 inches. In the running events Hartmann ran a 1:59 race in the 880-yard run to top all previous times posted for that event at the school in previous years.

What these underclassmen were able to prove was that seniors alone do not have to be the key to a winning season.

PAGE 149 — Top: With strain and concentration evident on his face, Giancarlo Amato arches his back as he clears the high bar. Lower: His windup completed, Co-Captain Dennis Callahan forces his body into his throw as he puts the shot. As a weight man, Callahan was the leading point scorer.

Golf brings pleasure despite losses

Their combined records were unimpressive: 7 wins against 17 meet losses. According to the record books, the boys' and girls' golf seasons were not successful. Yet according to the boys' No. 2 ranked golfer, Rich Kroenke, there was success in the golf season, not measured in terms of victories but in the depth of the pleasure golfers found in playing the game together.

That feeling of togetherness resulted in "a sense of support and friendship," said Jim N. Johnson. "Players cared how everyone else was doing out on the course. There was a real feeling of team spirit," he said.

Part of the reason the boys had positive reactions to a losing, 4-8, season was because of the leadership their new coach, Ron Peterson, brought to the group. "He has had a lifelong involvement with the sport," said Johnson. "He could teach the fundamentals well. Also, he arranged for us to play more courses than ever before."

No single individual dominated the team, according to Coach Peterson. Players were evenly matched and that resulted in keen competition for starting positions. That competition paid off in improved skills that brought wins over Edina West and Robbinsdale.

Improvement of skills was uppermost in girls' Golf Coach Myron Olson's mind, as well, for in his team's first season ever he found himself dealing with only one girl, Shari Sherman, who had completed 18 straight holes of golf in her life before the season began. "We practiced hard and played our best," said Sherman.

Fully a third of the team consisted of junior high students. The team had to compete with schools that had had girls' golf teams for several years. Even though the losses piled up, Coach Olson said he was "proud of the girls, the way they always did their best when they competed with other schools." Finally, the girls gained victories over Lincoln and Richfield on their way to a 3-9 overall record.

Even the many losses couldn't lessen the enjoyment players received from participating in the sport itself.

PAGE 150 — Top: After a hard round of golf, girls' Captain Lynn Swanell and teammate Shari Sherman take time to relax. They enjoy the pleasant weather and each other's company.

Inconsistency plagues girls' softball

With only 2 seniors and a first-year coach, the girls' softball team had little reason to expect much more than the 6-12 record they had posted by the season's end. Coach Mary Jo Hendrickson found herself in the position of having to build a team with a nucleus of underclassmen.

Lacking the discipline that comes with experience, the team had problems with their practices which were reflected in their many losses. Later in the spring the team "worked fairly well together in games," said Vickie Braman, "but our record could have been better if the players had been more intense during the practices."

During a year of inconsistency and repeated losses 2 players stood out from the team. Braman earned All-Conference, Honorable Mention, honors for her efforts at the shortstop position, while catcher Robin Knudson was an All-Conference selection. However, these players and the nucleus of underclassmen were unable to put together better than a .333 record and a Region rank of sixteenth.

As the teacher turns her back away from Jerry Karpovitz, he quickly takes the opportunity to butt in the lunch line. That's easy to do when you have been born with long arms and legs. Not everybody has the courage to protest against such a hungry giant.

Grade 1: Butting is best when you're big

Remember Mom's last words on your way to your first day of school?

"Remember to do everything the teacher says and always be polite. Don't forget your manners in the lunchroom. Oh, and BE GOOD!"

By noon that day, when you were standing in the sacred lunchline, those words had been forgotten.

As you filed into the lunchroom and you saw the 29 other kids ahead of you, that was it! You never had to wait in line at home, so why should you have to wait there?

Slowly you worked your way up. "Can I have heads?", you said to a fellow 150-pound classmate that had also been butting ahead. When you had almost reached the front, you felt a stern tap on your shoulders. Thinking it was the 150-pound classmate who had been following you, you turned around and yelled, "No!" But it was then you realized that the 150-pound first grader you thought it was, turned out to be your 110-pound first-grade teacher who then marched you back to the end of the line. By then the line was 30 kids longer because the other class had already come down for lunch. Silently, you said under your breath, "Wait until I'm an upperclassman, a big fourth grader, then we'll see who tells me what to do ... I'll show'em!"

As a replacement to the crusty old 3-wheel tricycle, Kim Thompson receives a luxurious brand new bike for Christmas, equipped with safety reflectors and colorful pinstriping. Attempting to master riding on 2 wheel proves to be tougher than Kim had thought.

Grade 2: Two-wheel chance to get away

While it wasn't the greatest thing on wheels, your first bike was a dream come true. You no longer needed the ol' scooter to get everywhere. Pedaling your new bicycle was much more effective than the 3-wheel method your little brother still used, before you took the training wheels off, that is. The loss of the 2 extra wheels meant a loss of balance. The first time you fell over, you blamed it on the bumpy road. Next time down, it was a friend's fault. Somehow you discovered that it was your fault, and that it would take lots of practice if you ever wanted to be as good as your idol, Evel Knievel.

It wasn't long before the 2-wheeler itself, wasn't enough to satisfy you. The garage sale hand-me-down just didn't compare to your friend's shiny new store-bought model. You wanted a new bike, but you settled for the latest bicycle accessories: a rear-view mirror, horn, speedometer, and a license plate with your name on it. Despite frantic pleading and begging, your mom wouldn't give you money for a decent tape deck.

It soon became time for your little brother to get a bike, and your parents decided to give him yours. You were heartbroken until they said that the deal included a new 10-speed for you. Now you could ride in style, while your dad put the training wheels back on the old bike.

Convinced that females are the worst beings alive, senior Scott Woidela makes a large "X" on his hand to forever keep the dreaded girl germs from contaminating him. His teacher notices this and strongly disapproves. She makes him wash it off with the assistance of the contagious females.

Grade 3: Age-old-itis finds no cure

"She touched me! Now I've got girl germs." These words could always be heard in just about every third grade classroom.

The fear of catching germs from fellow classmates was continually on top. But of course there were always a few who actually didn't mind coming in contact with germs such as these.

These people played it cool when touched by a person of a different kind. Although the opposite sex could not be avoided entirely for the rest of your life, there was one fool-proof method of not receiving the diseased germs.

The big "X" you put on your hand symbolized that you could not be capable of catching any germs, but to make that mark work, it could only be made in ink.

You knew you were safe as soon as you found a pen. That was a little difficult because third graders never had any use for pens.

After a while your teacher would notice the ink on your hands and immediately march you to the back sink to wash.

You then had to explain the purpose of having the "X" on your hand. You thought she would see it your way, but much to your surprise she explained what nonsense it was. Maybe back then you just couldn't understand what she meant, but hopefully in time you would catch on.

Despite her attempts at a sure-fire sales pitch, Diane O'Malley finds that the only interested party is "dear Mother." Mrs. O'Malley didn't mind that the kitchen was stacked with boxes of Girl Scout cookies, now that Diane had earned another badge to add to her collection.

Grade 4: Scouting aids your social life

After deciding Girl Scouts was the thing for you, the fun began. Your idea of being a perfect Girl Scout got even better when you got to wear the green uniform with matching benie and sash. The sash soon was filled with badges earned from camping, citizenship, and cooking, but only if your family didn't become seriously ill. Your first-aid badge was ready to help out then.

Free time was fun time when you were a Scout. Tours to processing plants and hospitals were only something non-Girl Scouts could dream about, even if places like General Mills and Pillsbury gave you new food samples that didn't quite taste as good as Mom's. At the hospital a smiley candystriper met you and took you to the lab, where you almost vomitted when you saw hundreds of blood samples on the shelves. A more typical meeting was spent in attempting to make a special plaster of Paris hand print for your mom and dad, or learning new songs and dances to amuse Grandma.

Cookie sales was the all-time favorite money raiser, even if your puppy-dog eyes weren't enough to keep your neighbors from looking at you and saying "I already bought some!" When you didn't sell your quota, you asked your last prospect, good ol' Mom, to buy the last of the 31 boxes you had promised to sell.

Surprised at the awful sounds that are coming out of Steve Challeen's trumpet, other fifth grade band students check to see if maybe Steve isn't blowing in the wrong end of his instrument. Unfortunately, he wasn't. The sound he was making was the sound he wanted to make.

Grade 5: Making a sound experience

Uncontrollable squeaks and heavy, gasping, rasping, air-filled tones were enough to cause ear paralysis. These noises might have belonged to a killer whale recording, though you knew they belonged to the long forgotten fifth grade band.

Back in fourth grade, your flutophone training helped prepare you, somewhat, for the musical activities facing you in the year to come. By the time you were in fifth grade you were deep into aggravating rehearsals in which you made unsuccessful attempts at achieving a clear tone.

Seemingly oblivious to your problems, your music teacher coached you and encouraged you and your fellow musicians during a new struggle, that of assembling the various noises into a unified sound called a band.

Your parents were anxious to hear their kiddies' screeching tones molded into a musical mass, and they filled the gym on concert night. With your butterflies and sweaty palms at the start of the performance, you had your doubts, which faded away when you rounded out the show with the ever-popular "Blue Rock."

Fifth grade offered you the start of developing your musical talent. Besides musical growth, you also ended up with enormous migraines after each rehearsal, not to mention your newly inherited swollen lips.

Laying down the law, senior Elaine Flann exercises authority as she simply states that throwing snowballs is a no-no. Unfortunately for Miss Flann, her fellow sixth graders do not always listen to her cool calm voice of female authority.

Grade 6: You all love a patrol (deacon)

Oh, the ups and downs of being an upperclassman in elementary school often came to you as big surprises. You received many privileges that were sometimes more than you could handle.

Take for an example being a school patrol. A patrol was one of the many honors granted to you as a fifth and sixth grader. According to the patrols' pledge, the respect for you would be one of highest quality from the underclassmen (first through fourth graders). You would be looked up to and admired by your teachers for your bravery in handling the children at school's designated crosswalks.

The one thing that surprised you most was when the kids were disorderly, even when your word was supposed to be as good as the law. You found out that as a patrol you were treated with about as much respect as you had once given to your former patrols.

It wasn't always the kids that ruined a patrol's days. The weather often dampened their spirits. Come rain, snow, snowballs, or iceballs, the patrols had their duties to stick to.

When it came time to turn in your flag, you replaced your smiles with frowns, for you knew that your year of power had drawn to a close, along with your year of abuse.

Having discovered her zit for the day, and at the same time checking to see if yesterday's zit was cured, Betsy Nermoe looks in her mirror. Several of her friends stare and laugh at her with ridicule and jealousy, as they were not yet familiar with the latest zit zapper.

Grade 7: When the face gets ripped

No one can go through an exciting seventh grade year without experiencing her first zit. Zits have been around since the Hershey bar and will probable remain until a new Oxy 25 is produced.

After an orgy of candy, people could always tell when you had become a victim of zits; you would come to school the next day with a red face, having discovered that sandpaper was an unbearable cure for your acne.

Seventh grade brought new stress and pressures to your life — and new life to your zits. Even so, if you were not yet a pimple pincher, you would be called "baby face", for most of your friends had their marks of maturity they called zits. As hard as you would search, finding even a small lump on your smooth clear skin seemed an impossible task.

But really, seventh grade had more burdens in store for you than just a measly zit. For in your seventh grade year you learned what it meant to carry your books to class, and to carry half your locker home after school. Practicing standing in line for lunch was replaced by watching everybody else butt in line, as you soon learned how to find your own way to the front.

No longer were you a child who enjoyed looking at the same teacher for 6 hours a day, for you had entered into junior high, Hershey bars, zits, and all.

You have to suffer a little for a beautiful smile. Orthodontist Peter Kuipers adjusts Jan Elvidge's braces, causing immediate pain but assuring her that someday she will be able to chew regular gum, corn on the cob, and even caramel apples with her gorgeous teeth.

Grade 8: Sacrifices made for even teeth

Braces were a disaster. How could you ever show your smile again, or even kiss your boyfriend without cutting his lips up? And if by chance he had braces too, there was always the chance of getting your jaws locked together. Of course, there were all the sweet nicknames to bear, like "Zipper Mouth" and "Brace Face," which didn't make you feel any better. Leftovers from lunch very often were seen dripping from your braces. Then, even if you got all the food out of your mouth, those little rubber bands always snapped out at the most embarrassing times. Smiling definitely had its disadvantages.

Your orthodontist would live forever in your memory as the man with the antiseptic smelling hands who never stopped talking to you even while he was adjusting your wires and bands. You were lucky he never really expected you to hold up your part of those in-office conversations.

At night you tried to clean out the remnants of your day's eating from your built-in garbage disposal. You never failed to be surprised at what you found in your mouth. Had you really eaten pizza burgers, chicken, apple pie and M&M's today? Yech. Your braces acted like a conscience that said, "It's diet time, baby."

Not satisfied with the activities of a typical ninth grade party, Mindy Schnoor and Todd Larson break loose from the sex-based social circles and

Grade 9: If Mom only could've seen

How could you forget your first boy/girl party? This was really a step up from musical chairs and pin the tail on the donkey. Naturally, you were a little nervous, but quite obviously so was everybody else: the boys were sitting huddled on one side of the room, and the girls were in their gossip circle on the opposite side.

What this party needed to liven it up was a person daring enough to break the ice with a witty remark like, "How's the weather?" Now the party was truly under way, at the expense of this gutsy person, who now was humiliated and who shyly retreated to his refuge in the nearest corner.

Thoroughly convinced that boy/girl parties are a great way to make new friends, Mindy and Todd go beyond a friendly hand shake.

When a 25-cent weekly allowance from Mom and Dad didn't meet the high-priced expenses of an exciting Friday night, senior Mike Johnson dons an apron and red bow tie to take on his first job as a bag boy at Super Valu. His 3.15 hourly wage tops Mom's best offer anyway.

Grade 10: Making a profit means work

After depending on mom and dad to provide you with money for 15 years, you decided to strike out into the working class. Reading through the want ads, you discovered that what you wanted was not easily found: short hours with a minimum of work for maximum pay.

So after days of searching, you settled for one of the typical high school jobs: working the counter at McDonald's, being a bag boy at Super Valu, or waitressing at Bridgeman's. Lying about your age, agreeing to work at all odd hours, and generally pleading with the management helped you to clinch the job.

Your loved your new job, and the experiences you had will never be forgotten . . . like the mayonnaise fight in the back kitchen of McDonald's, or the time you had to haul 20 bags of groceries and pack them into a Volkswagen, or when you had to wait on 10 tables and the total tips were zero.

But soon the strains of being an employed sophomore began to show. As the novelty of your job wore off, you longed for going out with friends, or getting to bed at a decent hour.

So you quit your job, but only too late did you discover that there's no such thing as unemployment compensation for worn out sophomores.

Upon finally receiving her driver's license, and after being lucky for the first half of the winter, senior Kim Wuertz shows her anxieties at having received her first ticket of her driving career. A police officer happily renders her a ticket for speeding.

Grade 11: Look out, here she comes

You got a ticket . . . there goes $30 for the fine, your use of the family car for 6 months, and a good portion of your social life. This is not exactly what you had in mind when you had pictured what it would be like to get your driver's license. You had envisioned the fun times a car would offer, like car chases that involved cute boys, and cruising to the most popular show.

You hadn't looked far enough ahead to realize that driving also means shelling out $120 every 6 months for insurance and $5 every other day just for the privilege of watching the gas gauge creep all the way up to nearly half full. Then there were the tires you wasted by patching out a few times too often in front of your boyfriend's house.

Only now did you realize the real expenses of driving and become aware of how much money you have to fork out to keep your pile of rust-on-wheels on the road, and in one piece. While driving expenses took their toll, the fun times you experienced made up for the money swishing down the drain.

As a junior you were old enough to drive, which meant you found out how great it was to cruise, while the community found out what a real hazard was like.

Grade 12: Graduation excites emotions

This wasn't exactly what you thought graduation would be like. Before the big day arrived you had visions of all the presents, the proud relatives, and the all-night party. These thoughts quickly disappeared as nervousness took over when the big night did arrive. You could feel every eye upon you as you walked up to receive your diploma.

When you got home, you were plagued with questions from everyone. The story of your future plans sounded more like it was rehearsed each time you told it. After all, how many different ways can you say, "I'm going to be a Burger King trainee"?

The party was great though, even if the caricature artist did forget to put a nose on the picture he drew of you. Somehow, you felt sort of sad to leave school and go out into a new world, full of surprising mysteries.

You had really done it. Thirteen years of teachers, desks, and homework had finally come to an end. You had never thought that you would miss high school, but now realized that you will. No more Friday night football games, Homecoming dances, or friends that you had been with since first grade. Once the cap and gown were off, you knew that this day marked a new beginning for you. You had reason to be proud — and just a little afraid.

After paying the bill for Nancy Carpenter's movietime goodies, Tom Walters wonders if he shouldn't have checked out her appetite before asking her to see a movie with him.

Juniors find movies a simple but costly escape

After an exhausting week of grueling academic study (deacon), many juniors found the only way to unwind their weary minds was to escape into the unthinking world of the theatre, where such hits as "Animal House" and Cheech and Chong in "Up in Smoke" attracted their attention.

Movies took over this year where discos left off. No longer were the crowds pouring into the discotheques the way they did last year, for films like "Grease", "Midnight Express", and "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" captured the students' imagination instead of dancing.

Those movies primarily attracted single-sex groups (meaning boys who were too cheap to take dates, and girls who failed to convince boys that they were worth at least as much as the price of a ticket.)

Other movies with more class were too much for daters to avoid, however, so couples out for a nicer night on the suburb may have been found at "Death on the Nile" or "Superman."

Perhaps the biggest deterrent to movie dates was the high cost of paying a date's expenses. While girls discovered just how much a date could drain their financial reserves only at Sadie Hawkins time, boys faced the problem every time they considered asking a girl out for a date.

Matinee movies went for only $1.50 a ticket, but few daters found matinees up to their dating standards. Instead, they paid the $3.75 demanded for evening tickets, and hoped their dates would go easy on the tubs of popcorn and small but costly cups of pop.

After the movie there was the threat of eating at some place more elegant, and expensive than the local McDonald's. Clearly, the best kind of date to have would have been one who only could go out on Saturday afternoons and who was always on a strict diet.

McDonald's is the place for rowdy juniors

Supposedly at McDonald's for a little after game chow, eating doesn't seem to be on the minds of these rowdy juniors. Jill Quist, Barb Theiler, Jamie Tamanaha, and Lisa Richards take aim with their ice as Lynn Cornell, Annette Tollefson, Kari Heetland, and Sue Peterson take cover from the falling cubes.

Often after a Kennedy game many juniors would congregate at the local McDonald's, where they converted game enthusiasm and school spirit into pure, unadulterated rowdiness.

After receiving their typical Mac 'n Don's order — consisting of a Big Mac, a large order of fries, and a Coke — they would move into the back dining room, as far away from McDonald's large-sized bouncers and the disgusted looks of anyone over 18.

What often happened then followed a time-honored ritual. Students would move into the relative safety of booths, where they would look inside their bags to see if their friends working behind the McDonald's counter had been able to slip them some extra fries in the order.

What happened from that point on was something that only a junior and/or a demented seventh grader could appreciate. Usually, the peaceful atmosphere of the restaurant would be suddenly shattered by someone letting go with a single cube of ice. Like the first shot of an undeclared war, that first ice cube being thrown in all directions, without respect to age, sex, or the mental stability of other diners. Then would come the soggy fries, oozing with ketchup, and drippy pickles rescued from the insides of Big Macs.

Juniors were known for their ferocious appetites more than they were for their food throwing skills, however, so the war would end almost as quickly as it had begun. So it was back to the Big Macs, minus the pickles, and the Cokes, minus the ice.

Then they would leave their mess for their friends, those loyal, generous Mac 'n Don's employees, to clean up. Without a doubt, rowdy juniors did their part to keep their friends actively employed.

Once back in their cars, juniors plotted their next move of the evening, but not before taking a couple of laps around the parking lot, just to be sure that they had seen everyone, and that everyone else had seen them. Licking ketchup from their fingers, they would marvel at how easy it was to have a good time.

Music pouring into her head through her earphones helps Melissa Rhedin to shut out the world as she absorbs some Pablo Cruise

Juniors unwind with top rock musicians

Music was everywhere. It was a background to everything, from doing homework to driving a car, talking on the telephone or simply relaxing.

While new performers and songs emerged, the theme and style mainly stayed the same.

With Fleetwood Mac's Rumours dominating soft rock, Pablo Cruise with Worlds Away, Foreigner's Double Vision, and Boston's Don't Look Back were other popular albums.

Hard rock fans remained loyal to Aerosmith, Led Zeppelin, Ted Nugent, Queen and Rush.

In the end, music was more a question of hard cash, however, as many prospective buyers were turned away by $6.99 album prices.

Sophomores have great school spirit

For many sophomores, an evening of fun meant attending a Kennedy game where they could watch their favorite jocks perform, meet other friends, be rowdy, and show their good school spirit. All this fun was theirs for 75 cents a ticket.

Finding transportation for non-driving sophs was a problem that had to be overcome by conning moms and big brothers and sisters into coming to their rescue.

Demonstrating their enthusiastic school spirit, sophomores Sue McGinley, Doris Graden, Minda Kuznia, Mary Maliszewski, Stacey Jacobs, Brad Dressen, Mike Lembeck, and Jim Sorenson scream for a victory by the Kennedy hockey team at the Bloomington Ice Gardens.

Sliding offers low-cost fun to sophs

Having been raised as typical Minnesotans, sophomores Nancy Knase and Mary Schaeppi find winter to be no obstacle to after-school enjoyment. All it takes to forget a day at school are the neighborhood boy's toboggan and a sliding course down the Running Park hills. Whizzing over the icy bumps, the unavoidable wipe out at the bottom ends the joyride. Then they head for the top and go for it again.

As an alternative to Buck Hill, sliding was a popular leisure activity for many sophomores. Borrowing a mini-boggan from little brothers and sisters was much less expensive than spending $6.50 for a lift ticket.

Gathering their friends together, sophomores would most likely hike to the hill. After making a few safe trial runs, they would resort to such childish activities as trying to see how many people they could pile on a single toboggan, or trying to get to the bottom of the hill the fastest. Naturally, attempts were made to pick off friends climbing unsteadily up the hill. Afterwards, hot chocolate seemed to warm cold stomachs and frozen fingers.

After being driven by Kennedy teachers for 6 arduous hours, Liz Nagle finds a mental release by tuning in to "Gilligan's Island" reruns and attacking a bag of pretzels. The basic non-thinking approach helped sophs wind down from classes.

Sophs learn slang from the tube

Television became the ultimate in vocabulary education once sophomores discovered 2 of the year's top new shows, "Mork and Mindy" and "Battlestar Galactica."

Mork introduced "nanu-nanu" to the earth's "shazbats", and he never had any "sweat off his front." Sophomores found their hero Apollo worried about the centons left before syclon battles.

Take that, earthly English teachers ...

Administrivia: 'principal' facts

These 3 questions are an examination of your knowledge of the work of the administrators. There are no right or wrong answers, for there are no absolutes when it comes to dealing with administrators.

1. The most popular excuse encountered by the administrators and Bergie Lang, attendance supervisor, for being late to class is:

- A. "The smoke in the bathroom was thicker than usual."
- B. "I was molested by something running out of the Chemistry Lab."
- C. "I was deciding my future."

2. Because of the small budgets in the district, few new teachers are hired. Competition is stiff, so suggested qualifications to have on one's applications are:

- A. Having a personal copy of "Everything You Ever Wanted to Know About Getting Along with High School Administrators but Were Afraid to Ask."
- B. Having taken one or more magic lessons on "How to Escape from a Closet After Being Locked in by an Enraged Student."
- C. Having sat through a seminar on "How to Save on Textbook Repairs Without Really Trying."

3. After experiencing the traumas of computer scheduling, some alternatives have been suggested by both teachers and students, which include:

- A. The Closed-Eyes Method. This involves tying a scarf around one's head, opening the classes manual, and putting one's finger in the middle of any page, then taking off the blindfold.
- B. The Eenie-Meenie-Mienie-Moe Method. Self-explanatory.
- C. The Proportional Method. This involves lining up favorite teachers (opinion formed on least complaints, least hall passes used, and best attendance at faculty meetings) and giving them cheerleaders, Kolleens, sports team members, and honor roll students. The rest receive Detention Room regulars.

Tantalizing, tricky test for teachers

Competency testing for students has been sweeping the country, and some schools have initiated similar tests for instructors. This test is designed for students to administer to their teachers. If the teachers pass this current events exam, they will have shown that they are aware that the world around them is alive, though not necessarily well.

1. John Travolta is:

- A. A leader of a fanatical religious sect in South America.
- B. The illegitimate son of Olivia Newton John.
- C. A clone of John Bloom.

2. Idi Amin is:

- A. The next generation's replacement for the Big Mac.
- B. This generation's replacement for Brylcreem.
- C. The name of Olivia Newton John's illegitimate son.

3. A tax cut is when a person:

- A. Cuts himself on his tax form.
- B. Is injured by stepping on more than 1 tack (tax) at a time.

4. The Shah of Iran is:

- A. Bergie Lang's childhood hero.
- B. The father of Olivia Newton John's illegitimate son.

5. A test tube baby is:

- A. baby who shatters when dropped on his little rim.
- B. A long, tall, skinny baby.

6. Jimmy Carter established diplomatic relations with Red China so:

- A. David Fong and Howard Wong could practice Taoism in the open.
- B. Olivia Newton John could get into the closet with Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-Ping

7. Pope John Paul made papal history for popes named "John Paul" when he:

- A. Was caught telling a Polish joke in the Vatican.
- B. Was caught with a big red

"S" on his undershirt.

8. NASA sent a rocket to Venus just to:

- A. Find another place that Jimmy Carter could extend diplomatic relations to.
- B. Find another place for Bergie Lang to send truant students to
- C. Find another place for the Phy. Ed. Department to take a field trip.

9. Worldwide problems caused thousands of refugees to apply for asylum, complete with homes and jobs, in Edina. Largest of these groups were:

- A. The "Boat People" from Vietnam, who were escaping Communist tyranny.
- B. The "Broke People" from Cleveland, who were escaping municipal financial anarchy.
- C. The "Bummed-Out People" from the faculty lounge, who were teachers laid off when Bloomington ran out children (through no fault of Olivia Newton John).

10. Most popular of the year's movies was "Superman", the story of:

- A. Kent Hrbek '78, who received more money for signing with the Twins, than the entire English Department has made in a lifetime of correcting grammar.
- B. Don Jackson '74, who received more money for signing with the North Stars, than the entire Phy. Ed. Department has made in a lifetime of distributing Bike Analgesic Balm.
- C. Christopher Reeve, who received more money for playing the part of Clark Kent in a movie based on the real life adventure of Jon Kuklish (deacon).

Mentors' methods make the mark

In any given school there will be a variety of courses offered. Likewise, there will be numerous teaching methods. This quiz will, in part, examine many of these methods at Kennedy. It is not the Profile's aim to say whether these teaching strategies are good or not; it is simply offered for the readers' pleasure. Try selecting the best answer for each question.

1. The Worksheet Method is the most commonly used teaching method because of its many variations. Most effective of these variations is:

- A. The Do-It-Yourself Method where the teacher has students do-it-themselves (logical, but not much fun).
- B. The Lecture Method, where the teacher reads the worksheet to the students (logical, especially in classes with slower students).
- C. The Uninvolved Teacher Method, where the teacher passes out the worksheet but fails to remember to wake up students to do them.

2. The Film Method has its firm advocates, mostly among Social Studies teachers who:

- A. Believe students can learn while sleeping.
- B. Believe students get off on watching babies being born.
- C. Believe it's easier to teach when all one has to do is flick a projector switch.

3. Despite tightening budgets some teachers still swear by the Field Trip Method of education, because:

- A. They believe students learn best while riding on buses.
- B. They believe students learn best while tromping through swamps.
- C. They believe students learn best when they have a break from films.

4. A favorite ploy of the less aggressive faculty members is the use of the Independent Study Method. That method is popular because:

- A. It allows faculty to catch up on their reading while students are catching up on their gossiping.

- B. It allows faculty to smoke at leisure in the Faculty Lounge while students are smoking at leisure just about everywhere else.
- C. It allows faculty to satisfy their thirst for coffee in the Faculty Lounge (if they can stand the smoke) while students are satisfying their thirst for knowledge at PDQ (and they can stand the smoke).

5. Faculty members from the Old School often revert to the time-honored Lecture Method because:

- A. As with films, it allows students to learn while sleeping.
- B. As with filmstrips, it's a break from films.
- C. It shows teachers which students have taken the course because they really want to learn, and which students signed up just for the field trips to the swamps.

6. The more socially minded teachers utilized the Group Project and Discussion Method because:

- A. It is easier to evaluate 1 project and give 6 students the credit than to grade 6 projects over coffee in the lounge.
- B. It gives poorer students the chance to soak grades off the good students, thus keeping them in high school and keeping more teachers off the unemployment line.

7. The Verbatim Method allows articulate teachers to dictate notes to students. This method is advantageous because:

- A. Students will then have something in their notebooks besides drawings of the teacher.
- B. At least students won't be able to complain about worksheets.

Students play; teachers turn grey

In the first 2 tests in the Faculty section there was a degree of fun made, at the expense of Kennedy's teachers. This trend ends in this quiz, however. In this test Profiles staffers will attempt to show that life is not all laughter and joy for the everyday teacher, that there is more in a teacher's day than the thrill of writing out a referral. This little quiz about student types shows what young people really care about, what their concerns are.

1. Teachers have had to deal with students who feel the most important thing about first hour is:

- A. Making a good entrance, usually late: "The bus was late," said the entrancing student.
- B. Catching up on all the sleep they missed the night before when they were out carousing: "Hey, Teacher, would you mind keeping the noise down?" said a note pinned to the unconscious student's face.

2. Those teachers who withstood the emotional challenges of first hour actually did move on to second hour. They always had the hope that second hour would be better than first hour, but then there always were students who:

- A. Had forgotten their Bonne-Bell Lip Smackers in their lockers: "I can't concentrate on my studies without my Lip Smackers," said the dull-lipped student.
- B. Had been awakened from their first-hour naps by the bell and who were too sleepy to remember where their second-hour classes were. They finally wandered in five minutes late. "My bus was really late," explained the dazed student.
- C. Were busy doing a report on unemployed Shahs. Unfortunately, algebra teachers were not interested in unemployed Shahs, but only in quadratic formulas. "We're going to practice math by subtracting you from the class," said the teacher with anger multiplying.

3. Third-hour teachers found that life was picking up, for most students finally were concerned about their studies, especially those who:

- A. Had already decided whether to go to Arby's or Burger King for lunch. "Has anyone seen my Burger King punch card?" asked the gluttonous student.
- B. Had found a good place to hide during the second-lunch food fight. "I hope Jello isn't on the menu," said the tidy student.

4. By fourth hour most students were engaged in vigorous class discussions. Unfortunately for the teachers, these discussions generally centered around:

- A. Who was seen doing what with whom at whose party.
- B. The social agenda for tomorrow's group discussion. "Without class discussions I wouldn't know the latest news," said the student, gossipingly.

5. When fifth hour finally rolled around, some teachers, still in a state of consciousness, were faced by 4 blank walls and an empty classroom, for it was their prep period. From such rooms a faint chorus of "Hallelujah" could be heard, just prior to the inevitable "plop, plop, fizz, fizz" of an Alka-Seltzer cooler in the making.

6. Sixth hour was the moment of truth for Kennedy teachers, for it separated the truly professional teachers from the fly-by-nighters. The real pro would:

- A. Look his students in the eye and say, "Gee, I hope you had a swell day. I sure did."
- B. Look his students in the eye and say, "It's nice to be important, but it's more important to be nice."

Answers abound for tricky tests

Profiles readers will find here answers to the first 2 quizzes printed in the Faculty section. Answers to the third quiz are not given, for the staff believes that any of the alternatives provided will suffice.

Test No. 1

Pseudo-correct responses for the tantalizing, tricky test on page 209:

1. Obviously, Choice C has to be the correct response. Haven't you seen John Bloom lately?
2. Surprisingly, Choice C again. Wait until People magazine gets a load of this.
3. Either Choice A or B, for a cut is a cut.
4. The answer, as many of you may have guessed, is Choice A, for who else has caused more riots at Kennedy than Bergie Lang?
5. Choice B fills the bill for this one. A test tube baby is indeed a long, tall, skinny baby.
6. Again Choice B is most correct, and we are sure that People magazine will be glad to pick up on this, but remember folks, you heard it here first.
7. Surprisingly it is Choice A. The Pope really has a good sense of humor, and you should hear him tell the one about Poland's national tree.
8. This time it is Choice B. Said Mr. Lang, "I think the threat of being sent to Venus would really keep our kids in line."
9. Choice C must be correct, for like everyone else, teachers think that the perfect life is to be found in Edina, thus proving the age-old axiom that the grass is always greener on the other side of the freeway.
10. Choices A, B, or C. All are truly Supermen in their own right, but Miss Lane has left them stranded.

Test No. 2

Pseudo-correct responses for the mentor's methods test on page 210:

1. Choice C clearly is the best answer. Teachers have learned over the years from uninvolved students that being uninvolved is where it's at.
2. History has shown that Choice A is correct, as whole generations of young people have graduated without ever having been truly awake during class movies. The big job is remembering to have someone wake them in time to receive their diplomas.
3. This answer seems to be Choice A. Because most of an average field trip is spent on a bus, it must be that teachers feel that buses do something to stimulate otherwise dormant brain cells. Perhaps carbon monoxide has positive properties.
4. Choice A, of course. It takes time to get through all those brochures on teacher retirement spas in Florida.
5. In this case the answer would be Choice A, naturally. Teachers feel that they should not change a winning combination. In fact, most teachers feel that students are easier to handle when asleep. While sleeping students may not be learning anything, at least they are not preventing others from being able to learn something.
6. This time it's Choice B. Most teachers are all for the continuing employment of ... teachers.
7. Choice B is correct, because if there's one thing teachers hate it's whinning students

I would like to take this opportunity to tell the 1979 staff that I think you all are weird, strange and incredibly outrageous. I just don't mean the "finger snapping clique" (pun intended) or Rupee Reuder. Rest assured, I mean all of you. Through every deadline you kept your humor, but you always maintained the high quality that we have come to expect from this yearbook. I thank you for your humor, the hard work, and the time you put into this book. It really has been a pleasure to be associated with you. I even forgive you for calling me Ida.

Jim,
Isn't it great,
we finally made it! It's been nice knowing you through the years
I'll probably see you at reunions
when I come back

with my husband &
3 kids - Good luck in life - Nancy

Leaving memories behind...

You knew it would happen, the thought was always there. Sometimes you looked forward to it with anxious anticipation, yet sometimes you wished the time would never arrive. But you knew it would. The crowds dispersed, and everyone went their separate ways. Gone were the pepfests and the rowdy times at McDonald's. You knew that some people would be back, but others would not. No matter how bad you felt, you knew the memories would always be there. And you learned so many things, whether it was how to be an active member of a crowd, or how to be in front of one. No matter where you go, you know there will always be new people to meet, and new crowds for you to please.

Parting from the crowd

No matter how much you enjoyed being a part of a carefree crowd, you also had to be alone. Those were the times when a crowd could be of no help. You needed to feel that you were an individual, unique and special. You needed to develop your own thoughts and ideas, separate from those of your group. It was a peaceful time when you found that you could reflect on your world. Most importantly, it was the time when you developed the special talent and characteristics that made you different from all the rest. You strived to make the most of those talents. It wasn't always easy, but slowly you gained confidence in yourself and your abilities. And after you made the most of your abilities, you could return to your crowd, knowing that you were, indeed, AN individual.

Jim,
 I don't know you for quite a long time now but over the years it seems ~~to~~ we've become strangers. I hope all your dreams come true and I wish you the best of luck in everything you do.
 Love always,
 Cathy Benz

Jim,
 I never got to know you but what I do know I like.
 Hope to see you at Dynamite
 Good luck in your future
 Love,
 Cathy Benz

Jim,
 I don't really know you that well, but I'm glad you went on the canoe trip cause' you made it so much more fun,
 see you at graduation!
 skindly

Jim,
 Now that you're a graduate you'll have a great time. Enjoy a well earned summer.

Love,
 Sally Westley

missed you in our class. I hope that you really love the best of luck in your future with all of us. Love Kim Knapp '79

Give a cheer!

The Kennedy Eagle ... the Kennedy crowd — together they symbolized the spirit of a year, your year, 1979. Fourteen years ago, when Kennedy was opened, the Eagle was chosen as the team mascot and school symbol, for it was associated with the young President, John F. Kennedy, whose vitality and spirit lay at the heart of the new school. Since that time Kennedy crowds have come to regard the Eagle as their own; crowds have gathered to cheer for the school, for the Eagle as its symbol. So they did in 1979, this year of the crowd pleaser.

Jim, I hope you'll probably be camping and hunting all summer. Good luck in the future. Phil's crew

Jim, I hope you enjoyed as much as we did. (7)

Jim,
Another year is gone, and we're graduating.
We don't feel good. To hell with it.
I would have any classes by the end of the year.
I don't want one to sign.

Jim,
 Another year is gone, and we're graduating soon. I feel good. To be honest, I would have loved to see any classes
 by the end of the year.
 (I hope the school one to sign)
 What a blast!
